Southern Illinois Is Stirred by Crime Wave

PAPERS REQUESTED TO FEATURE CRIME LESS IN COLUMNS

Sequel to Hight-Sweetin Double Murder Revealed in Confession of Wife She Slew Miner Husband.

MAN IN CASE DENIES POISON CONSPIRACY

Third Minister Unfrocked by Conference Following Alleged Hugging Episode With Girl.

BY WILLIAM DOUTHITT.

Chicago, September 27.—A modern Beast of the Apocalypse has chosen southern Illinois as its liar, using the cities and town roundabout as an exercise ground for its Four Horsemen of Crime.

And the plague of the whole thing is that the newspapers persist in publishing the news of the various activities of these Horsemen.

All this is the view of the Murphysboro (Ill.) Chamber of Commerce, which has just passed resolutions demanding suppression of some of the crime news of southern Illinois and urging publication of more "constructive items."

And here are a few of the more recent things which have brought the plague of publicity on southern Illinois:

1. Hight-Sweeten double poisoning case, in which Rev. Lawrence Hight confessed to poisoning his wife so that he might wed Mrs. Elsie Sweeten, his affinity, who admits poisoning her husband for a similar reason.

2. Tate-Herrington poisoning case, in which Mrs. Ruby Herrington Tate confesses to poisoning her former husband, Joseph Herrington, so that she might wed her lover, Robert Tate. She accuses Tate of having furnished the poison for the job.

3. Unfrocking of Rev. J. O. Richardson, of Thompsonville, by the Southern Illinois Methodist Episcopal conference on charges of conduct unbecoming a minister, based on an alleged hugging episode with a young girl in the church at Thompsonville.

4. Unfrocking of Rev. C. M. Latimer by the same conference on charges of conduct unbecoming a minister.

Presumably, the complaint of the character of the news emanating recently from southern Illinois also includes references to the various massacres, gun-fights, liquor raids, plain killings, and klan and anti-klan battles in and around bloody Herrin in scarlet Williamson county, and which series of chronicles dates backward in a steady stream to the first notorious Herrin massacre of 1920, when more than a score of non-union miners were shot down as they fled from an unknown "firing squad."

WOMAN CONFESSES SLAYING HUSBAND.

Marion, Ill., September 27.—Confession that she had poisoned her former husband, Joseph L. Herrington, 34, in a plot with Robert Tate, whom she married last Tuesday, 20 days after Herrington's death, was made today by Mrs. Ruby Herrington Tate, 30, in the Williamson county jail here.

Poison placed in a cup of peas in Herrington's lunch box taken to the coal mine at Johnston City, where both men worked, Mrs. Tate said, was the cause of his illness, and a teaspoonful and a half of poison placed in a glass of buttermilk was the final cause of death. Mrs. Tate asserted Tate put the poison in the peas and she administered the final dose.

Tate Denies Conspiracy.

Tate, a former boarder at the Herrington home, late today continued his denials of a poison conspiracy. The two were arrested at West Frankfort shortly after last midnight.

Sheriff Galligan ordered the arrest of Harry Everly and John Downey, brothers-in- law of Tate, on suspicion of having knowledge of the case.

The sheriff said Tate told him this afternoon he had asked his brother-in-law to watch his actions the morning the crime was committed, as some one was going to be poisoned and he did not want to be blamed.

This was the first material admis-

Tradition Broken By Bronze Statue For Kemal Pasha

Turks Give Order to Gutzon Borglum for 30-Foot Equestrian Figure.

New York, September 27.—Turkey has defied a Moslem proscription of 13 centuries' standing by ordering from Gutzon Borglum a huge made-in-America equestrian bronze statue of Mustapha Kemal Pasha, head of the new Turkish republic.

Since early in the Christian era, the Turk has been a destroyer rather than a builder of statues. They violated his Moslem precepts and aroused his religious ire. But strange things are said to be happening in the land of mosques, fezzes and harems under the reign of the popular Kemal Pasha.

The statue will be 30 feet high, of cast bronze, will cost approximately $200,000 when erected in Angora, and probably will require two years for completion.

WARN AMERICANS AGAINST DABBLING IN GERMAN BONDS

Berlin Finance Ministry Fears New Reverses to Credulous Buyers Unless Buying Ceases.

BY ERIC KEYSER.

Berlin, September 27.—Serious alarm over the widespread American speculation in German war and municipal bonds is being felt in the German ministry of finance and there is fear that Americans, through no fault of this country, are due for some heavy losses.

Hans Luther, minister of finance, and his associates fear that the gambling fever in Wall street and elsewhere in the United States may lead to new reverses by credulous American buyers, which in turn would react seriously against Germany.

Reports lately indicate increased dabbling by Americans in German bonds. In sources close to the ministry of finance it is realized that if the American public loses heavily on war and municipal bonds, due to the fact that they have not been valorized, Americans probably will claim that Germany is guilty of "swindling" as many charged when thousands of Americans were burned by their speculations in marks.

Officials of the finance ministry made it clear today that so far as it is concerned there will be neither valorization nor interest on the bonds. This is a reiteration of the views which Herr Luther already has expressed before the valorization committee of the reichstag.

On the other hand, the public demand for the valorization of war loans is increasing. The Catholic church, led by Cardinal Pertram, Archbishop of Breslau, is demanding the valorization of the church's holdings of war loans. Cardinal Bertram contends that to wipe out the debt by inflation is contrary to the principles of Christian morality. The finance ministry, however, has informed the United News that any valorization would be contrary to the spirit of the Dawes plan and would make it difficult, or perhaps impossible, to deliver the payments which the Dawes formula provide. The valorization question, one of the most important in post-war Germany, was by no means settled through Luther's declarations, especially as the reichstag committee wants the interest paid. This means that the fight on the subject will be transferred to the floor of the reichstag.

USE BOTH HANDS IN STEERING CAR, IS POLICE ORDER

New Orleans, La., September 27.—Both hands on the steering wheel and eyes to the front. That, in effect, was the order issued to the traffic squad of the local police department tonight.

"Several complaints have been received of automobile drivers keeping their right arms around their female companions while driving," said the formal order. "This constitutes reckless driving and the safety of the public is endangered by this practice. You will break it up by making affidavits against the guilty parties."

M'DONALD STAKES FATE OF CABINET ON RUSSIAN PACT

Labor Premier of Britain Announces Intention To Consider Vote on Treaty One of Confidence.

DEFENDS HIS REGIME AS FREE FROM HARM

Declares Neither Reputation, Prestige Nor Stability of England Has Suffered From His Leadership.

BY CHARLES M. McCANN.

London, September 27.—Premier Ramsay MacDonald is ready to stake the fate of his government on England's relations with Russia. If the house of commons refuses to ratify the two treaties which the labor government signed between England and the soviets last month, MacDonald will appeal to the country in a general election.

MacDonald revealed this attitude, the strongest his government has adopted so far, in a speech at Derby today. His announcement means that he is prepared to resign if his policies do not carry in parliament, and brings to a head the delicate political situation which recently has reflected increased opposition to the labor regime.

To Appeal to People.

"If the house of commons refuses to ratify the treaties," the prime minister said, "then the commons had better be prepared to censure us. I do not think the country wants a break; but if forced to, we shall appeal to the people."

MacDonald's speech was more than a defiance of the conservatives and liberals on his Russian policy. It

Vanished Airmen Again Are Object Of Frantic Hunt

Unharmed Plane of 2 Britons Found in Midst of Trackless Desert.

London, September 27.—The outbreak of trouble between British troops and Turks in the disputed territory of Iraq has revived the search for two officers of the British air forces who vanished completely two months ago, leaving their airplane in perfect condition in the midst of a trackless desert.

It is now feared that Flight Lieutenant W. T. Day and a Dr. Steward, a pilot officer, both of them members of the air force which polices the entire country without the aid of any troops, may have met with foul play. At any rate, the case presents the most baffling of mysteries.

The two airmen departed from the airdrome at Shaibah on July 24. When they failed to return by evening, a search was immediately organized.

Plane Not Damaged.

By land and air, the desert was carefully combed and on the following day an aviator spotted the missing plane in a lonely spot of the great wastes.

The searchers found that the gasoline tank of the plane was filled and the plane in perfect working order—one of the searchers eventually boarded her and flew her into the airdrome without any difficulty.

But Day and Steward had vanished completely, and the strangest feature of all was that no footprints could be traced away from the spot where the plane was found—thus obviating the possibility that the pair had been kidnapped by tribesmen.

Officials Puzzled.

To add to this puzzle, dispatches here say that there was no trace whatever of the airmen leaving the plane, the only marks visible in the sand being those the wheels of the airship made as she landed.

Officials of the air ministry refuse to speculate as to what may have happened to the men. Naturally, they believe there is some explanation outside the supernatural, but they confess that Day and Steward disappeared as effectually as if the earth had swallowed them.

Even aside from the lack of footprints, it is declared that the kidnapping theory would be untenable inasmuch as the search for the missing men was organized so promptly that the kidnappers would have been unable to reach safety.

The New Menu!

Rich Maid Weds Soda-Jerk

PEACH FRAPPES WIN HEART OF MATILDA MEYENSCHEIN

And Takes Him Home to Dad

BY HAROLD ANDREWS.

Chicago, September 26.—Matilda Meyenschein, the winsome little daughter of F. A. Meyenschein, wealthy portrait painter, who spent most of the summer afternoons sitting in the little drug store around the corner, has brought home for the approval of papa and mamma the poor soda jerker whose magnificent double-frosted chocolates and peach creams won her heart.

Earl Wormalts, the poor youth who reached the heart of the little heiress via the gastronomic route, followed Matilda rather meekly when she romped into the drawing room of the Meyenschein mansion.

"Muddy and Daddy," exclaimed little Matilda breathlessly as she tossed her high school textbooks into the corner, "this is Earl!"

Although Mr. and Mrs. Meyenschein had never regaled themselves with any of the concoctions of Earl, there was something about him that elicited their approval. Perhaps they reasoned that Matilda, being as she is, very lovely and an heiress as well, would naturally be sought after by an earl. Why not this Earl?

Besides being very young, he was a hard worker and industrious. Indeed, in the space of a few months he had become the fastest soda slinger in the store, and had already been given a $3 raise, making his salary $18.

And so the poor soda squirter married the heiress Friday and gained the privilege of serving her with beans and bacon even as he had served her with banana splits and double chocolate malted milks in the days of his wooing.

Until a year ago Earl worked on a farm near Oregon, Ill. Then came the irresistible urge and one morning he hopped a freight train chugging Chicagoward. On Chicago's outskirts the brakeman booted Earl off the freight and into the tall weeds.

Earl walked a few blocks down the street until he saw a drug store with a sign in the window saying: "Boy Wanted." Earl landed the job, met Matilda and landed her. "They'll be at home with us," the bride's mother says.

"Earl will be back on the job Monday. He's a good boy," says his boss.

Liquor Car Hits 3 Autos in Race With Officials

Loaded With 100 Gallons of Rum, Auto Caught Heading Into Atlanta.

Decatur, Ga., September 27.—After almost completely demolishing three automobiles in an effort to escape DeKalb county officers who were chasing him, a man who gave his name as J. H. Holloway and his address as Morrow, Ga., was arrested late Saturday night and lodged in the DeKalb county jail when a search revealed about 100 gallons of liquor in his machine. No one was injured in the crashes, officers said.

The chase began near Ingleside when officers, suspecting that Holloway was carrying liquor in his large touring car, started to search it, when the prisoner began the eight-mile race to Atlanta.

The first car he struck was standing against the curbing near the Decatur depot, and he left it a total wreck, without, however, apparently damaging his own car. He next ran into one at Oakhurst, passed on through Kirkwood, and was stopped after he ran into still another automobile on Decatur street, Atlanta.

DeKalb county officers, L. S. Henderson and W. A. Rogers, confiscated the liquor and placed him under arrest. They said he was forced to slow up in Atlanta traffic and was overtaken.

Begin To Prepare Giant Dirigible For Trip to U. S.

30 Tons of Gasoline and 800 Pounds of Food Must Be Put Aboard.

Friederichshafen, Germany, September 27.—Preparations for the trans-Atlantic flight of the ZR-3, the Zeppelin-built giant dirigible, which is to be turned over to the American navy after its voyage across the sea to Lakehurst, N. J., are to begin immediately in anticipation of beginning the long air journey on October 5 or 6.

One of the first tasks in equipping the big airship for its history-making trip over the sea will be the taking aboard of 30 tons of gasoline and 800 pounds of food for the crew and the Americans who will be aboard. The work of overhauling the dirigible will begin at once. One of the motors will be taken down and minutely inspected for flaws by the technicians.

During yesterday's rain, when the ZR-3 was returning to Friederichshafen from her successful trial trip over Germany, the huge envelope absorbed several tons of water. Several days will be required for the envelope to dry out. By next Saturday, Dr. Hugo Eckner, director of the Zeppelin company in charge, expects everything will be spick and span for the departure.

It was announced that the weather prospects were good for the early part of October. Word was received today that three American war vessels would be stationed at points on the Atlantic route for the purpose of keeping the dirigible navigators advised of weather conditions.

SPOTTED TYPHUS ADDS TO HORRORS OF RUSSIAN FLOOD

Hundred New Cases Reported Daily in Storm-Swept City of Leningrad.

Leningrad, September 27.—(By the Associated Press.)—Spotted typhus has broken out in this storm-swept city, adding its horrors to the flood. More than a hundred cases of the disease are being registered daily and doctors and nurses are overwhelmed in the work of caring for the patients.

One of the most gruesome aspects of the flood was the havoc wrought in the cemeteries where newly-made graves were washed out by the avalanches of water and the bodies floated away in the streets. The dangers of the pestilence are very great and the authorities are taking stringent measures to check the spread of the disease.

Business Improving.

Although the population still is suffering grievously from the efforts of last Tuesday's storm the city is gradually returning to its normal calm. Seventy-four out of 103 state factories have resumed operations and the government has appointed M. Zinoviev, Kameneff, Kalinin and Smyrnoff a special committee to appraise the losses caused by the flood and to determine the sums necessary for reconstruction and relief work.

The museums of the city suffered greater losses than any other institutions in the flood. A great part of the priceless collections of paintings, tapestry and antiques of the museum Alexander III was destroyed, 250 cases of art objects having been removed from the water while fifty cases are still soaking, perhaps irreparably damaged.

Heavy Property Loss.

In the famous Academy of Sciences fifty-nine salons were flooded, causing the destruction of hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of property. The zoological and enthnographical museums also suffered great losses.

The suburb of Peterhof was hit harder than any other of the adjacent towns. In the palace there the water rose to a height of two feet, seriously damaging the magnificent period furnitures and paintings. The steamship wharf with its historical collection of cannon was wrecked and washed away while the roads leading to Peterhof park were completely washed out. Nearly 1,000 trees were uprooted.

The property loss, it now is estimated, will run into millions while the intrinsic loss can not be accurately measured.

G. O. P. UNWILLING TO MEET ISSUES, CHARGE OF DAVIS

Instead, Republicans Are Seeking To Create "Bogey Man" of La Follette as Bolshevik, He Says.

PLAN TO FRIGHTEN VOTERS AT ELECTION

1924 To Be Known as "Year of Great Silence," as 1920 Was One of Great Promises.

Wilmington, Del., September 27.—Spokesmen of the republican party were charged here tonight by John W. Davis with an "unwillingness" to meet the "real issues" of this campaign and with seeking to bring on the stage, instead, a "bogey man" by representing Senator La Follette, the independent presidential candidate, as a bolshevik.

"When the hopes of men can no longer be raised by promises," the democratic presidential candidate said, "when their expectations can no longer be met by party performance, what is there left to play upon but their fears? And so I detect the bringing on the stage of a new 'bogey man.' He is wearing a fur cap and a long red robe, and on his breast his name is written in curious characters such as we rarely see in the United States; and they point to him and tell you he is a bolshevik. But when his cap falls off and he lays down his red gown, you find that he is none other than our familiar friend, Senator Bob La Follette, of Wisconsin.

No Brief for La Follette.

"Now, I have no brief for Senator La Follette, and it is not my duty to defend any of Senator La Follette's governmental ideas, but there is one of his ideas from which I profoundly dissent—and, unlike certain gentlemen who are quite excited at this hour on the subject, I claim to have been one of those who have discussed it adversely for at least 20 years—and that is the proposition that there shall be taken away from the supreme court of the United States the final power to say when congress has and when it has not ex-

Big Crime Plot Bared in France By Wary Jeweler

Police Arrest Crook Who Planned Lethal Gas Murders and Gem Robberies.

Paris, September 27.—A plot which provided for one of the most daring crimes in French history—the theft of priceless jewels after their owners had been exterminated in lethal chambers—has been broken up by the police after every detail for carrying out the imaginative scheme had been arranged.

The ingenious plan for jewel robberies originated in the fertile brain of the so-called Marquis Elie de Champaubert, an adventurer whose papers show him to be Andre Simooning a former raiser of chickens, but whom the police believe is Gabriel Gourard, a notorious swindler. The self-styled Marquis has just been arrested by the police of Dinard, in Brittany.

The Marquis rented a chateau on the Normandy coast, furnished it in imposing style and notified five of the most prominent jewelers of Paris to bring him diamond and pearl necklaces and other gems worth thousands of francs. He informed these dealers of the Rue de la Paix that he desired to surprise his wife with a handsome gift.

The first of the intended victims became suspicious, the police were called, and then—

It was discovered that de Champaubert, or whatever the adventurer's name may be, had transformed rooms in the cellar into padded cells and lethal chambers, where the police declare he intended to entice the owners of the jewels, administer chloroform to them, and escape to England with his loot. The police say that the marquis has confessed to his criminal plans.

AGGRESSOR BRAND IS NOT RESERVED TO SIGNERS ONLY

Dr. Benes Explains Intent To Compel Peace From All Nations by Force If Necessary.

NO VOICE DISSENTED TO INTERPRETATION

Negotiations To Compromise Jap Reservations Still Unsettled—Pact Before Council Monday.

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.

Geneva, September 27.—Looming like a beacon from the almost innumerable points of interest marking the closing debate today on the proposed protocol of arbitration and security was one possessed of peculiar importance for the United States and other countries which are not members of the League of Nations. It was an interpretation of the protocol made by Dr. Edouard Benes, as official reporter to the assembly, that states which do not sign the protocol and do not belong to the league may be proclaimed aggressor states if they refuse the arbitral proceedings laid down by the protocol and the league covenant and resort to war.

Should this happen the signatory states would be obliged to apply sanctions against the non-member states, as provided for in the league covenant and emphasized by the protocol now under discussion.

No Protesting Voice.

There was no dissenting voice when M. Benes gave this interpretation. The question came before the disarmament commission while it was taking a final glance over the various clauses of the protocol. It was raised by M. Boncour, of France, who remarked that Article XVII of the covenant stipulated that in the event of a dispute between a member of the league and a non-member state the league council must undertake the same procedure of conciliation and mediation as existed for conflicts between members.

M. Boncour said that questions of relations with a non-member state was grave from the standpoint of security and it was most important that it should be clearly understood that under the covenant as adjusted by the protocol a country which never was a member of the league or signator of the protocol and refused to accept arbitration or conform to the measures contained by the council would be subject to sanctions.

System Is Simple.

"The signatories of the protocol," he declared, "would have both the duty and obligation of applying to such a refractory and recalcitrant state not the sanctions of the covenant, because the state was not liable to the covenant, but the sanctions of the covenant as defined by the protocol."

Dr. Benes explained that one article of the protocol had adopted the rule of the covenant concerning non-member states involved in disputes with members. And M. Boncour was right, declared Dr. Benes. The system was extremely simple. A country which was neither signatory of the protocol nor a member of the league would be invited by the council to accept the procedure of arbitration and if that state resorted to war in disregard of this procedure then it would be considered to have violated the protocol and would be subject to sanctions.

Disarmament Body Meets.

The disarmament commission of the assembly met tonight with the intention of completing its examination of the protocol. Exception was made to the arbitration clauses, which are in the hands of another commission. It fully expected that this document will be presented to the assembly Monday, whether or not the arbitration clauses are ready.

Dr. Benes read 26 pages of a typewritten report outlining broadly the main features of the protocol and explaining just how it varied from the league covenant. He said a system was about to be presented to the assembly and the world wanted a complete and conclusive system of arbitration, security and reduction of armaments.

He explained that a certain elasticity is allowed with reference to the fulfillment of sanction obligations by the various states, because it is realized that states are not in possession of equal facilities for acting when the time comes to apply sanctions. Article IV of the protocol, however, arranged that the council should be informed in advance of what each state should contribute. A great omission in the covenant had made good because henceforth there could be no evasion of responsibility to apply sanctions against an aggressor, who now could always be determined.

Explains Passage of Troops.

Dr. Benes emphasized also that the obligation of states to afford passage through their territory of forces which were cooperating against an aggressor still exists.

This admonition was received with interest, in view of the declaration of Count Kessler today that Germany will ask to be relieved from the necessity of authorizing the passage of foreign troops through German territory designed, for instance, to make an attack on Russia as an aggressor. The general opinion expressed tonight was that Germany would have great difficulty in having her suggestion complied with.

Furthermore, Dr. Benes pointed out that the protocol does not affect the special position of Switzerland fixed by the declaration of the council of London, February, 1920. Concluding, he pleaded for acceptance of the protocol, declaring that the peace of the world was at stake.

Jap Reservations Unsettled.

With the negotiations over, the Japanese reservations to the protocol still unsettled, considerable excitement was caused in the league of nations' palace tonight by the posting of an official communication from the Japanese delegation. This communication reproduced a statement by the Japanese foreign office that Japan would adopt a policy of non-interference in the internal affairs of China. It then proceeded to cite an editorial opinion from the Osaka Asami of September 23, which counseled Japan to go slow in fixing its attitude towards the proposed protocol of arbitration and security.

The newspaper made the point that the machinery of the protocol would probably never apply to the United States, Germany or Russia, because their ratification of the protocol was exceedingly doubtful. Great Britain's ratification also seemed doubtful to Asami, which thought that Japan could wait until the disarmament conference, where the non-signatory states probably would be represented.

Japs Tear Note Down.

The posting of this Japanese opinion in an official communication immediately gave rise to the belief that the Japanese delegation had circulated the Asahi's opinion purposely to explain its difficulties with home opinion in connection with the question of its adherence to the protocol. On learning of this interpretation of the communication members of the Japanese delegation hastened to the league of nations palace and tore down the document, explaining that this interpretation was erroneous. The delegates said they had merely transmitted the Asahi view along with others to the information section of the secretariat of the league. Officials of the information section said they were authorized to post the communication.

Coming on top of today's difficulties growing out of the Japanese reservations to the protocol, the communication caused a sensation. Later another communication was posted, asserting that the Japanese delegation took no responsibility whatsoever for the opinion expressed by the Asahi, that the posting of this communication as an official document was requested and that no significance should be attached to its contents as expressing the views of the Japanese government.

According to information available from prominent European delegations, the Japanese delegation has already accepted in principle the incorporation of a general compromise clause in the protocol which will meet Japanese desires. The clause is that all possible disputes shall receive the attention of the council as a mediatory body, without, however, specifically mentioning conflicts which are based on matters interpreted by the world court as lying entirely within the domestic jurisdiction of countries.

The membership commission of the assembly today unanimously recommended the election of Santo Domingo as the fifty-fifth member of the league of nations.

DISARMAMENT BODY ADOPTS BENES DRAFT.

Geneva, September 27.—(By the Associated Press.)—The disarmament commission of the league of nations assembly tonight adopted the Benes report on the draft protocol of arbitration and security.

The commission decided that the world wide disarmament conference be held June 15, 1925, if by May 1, a majority of the states represented in the league council and ten others shall have ratified the protocol.

The Japanese objections to the arbitration clauses go over until the Sunday morning session of the juridical committee. There is little hope that Japan's positions will be changed, according to the impression conveyed by Viscount Adachi to the delegates tonight.

ceeded the limitations of power the people gave it, and when the states of the union have and when they have not infringed the authority of the federal government that the people vest in it, and when the federal government has and when it has not invaded the rights that the people reserve to the states.

"But when I am told Senator La Follette's proposal comes from Moscow, from those—in the language of a certain letter I had occasion to read last week—fresh from a lurid baptism in the miseries of Russia, I begin to scratch my head and think a little about my history, and I realize that my real objection to Senator La Follette's proposal is not that it is leading us on to Moscow, but that it is trying to take us back to London.

Really English System.

"Well, what is this proposal, after all, but simply that we shall abandon our American system of government under a written constitution and accept in its place the English theory that parliament is supreme, and that the constitution of Great Britain is what the parliament of the moment desires it to be. I do not like the British theory as well as ours, and I do not like it either in the modified form proposed by Senator La Follette, or in the far more dangerous form of which Theodore Roosevelt made himself the protagonist when he demanded the recall of judicial decisions.

"I should be slow, for that reason, to denounce either Senator La Follette or Theodore Roosevelt as a bolshevik, and I decline for myself to stand afrighted before the bogey man. You know, we must have a bogey man in American politics occasionally."

Year of Great Silence.

Just as the historian will describe the year 1920 as that of "the year of great promises," so he will come to denominate 1924 as "the year of the great silence," Mr. Davis declared in his address to several thousand persons.

"It is a vast, pervading and mysterious silence," Mr. Davis said. "It is broken here and there by the vocal nominee of the republican party, warning the American people in anxious tones that around every corner and under every bedstead there lurks a bolshevik ready to destroy them. Now and then some person almost forgotten writes to a candidate and complains of the terms in which he has been described.

"And then occasionally some cabinet officer, standing on the western shore, will rattle his sabre like a new toy recently given him. The extinguisher is placed upon him and silence reigns supreme once more. It all reminds me of nothing so much as the words of Tennyson:

"'The dead steered by the dumb, moved onward with the flood.'"

"Why this silence?" asked Mr. Davis. Then he proceeded to answer his own question with a review of the record of the republican party's administration of the federal government, both in the field of domestic and foreign affairs.

The democratic presidential nominee declared that one of the big issues of this campaign was that of party responsibility, and he added that the republican party should and must be held to accountability for its acts.

"And that brings me to a painful subject," the nominee added. "I could recite that chapter simply by calling names. I could say 'Teapot.' I see that you understand what I am talking about.

"I could say 'Perryville.' I see that the world war veterans and their friends know what I mean. Then I might talk about Gaston Means." That brought a laugh.

"But this is a serious subject," Mr. Davis went on. "The betrayal of the public trust by these men was not a random accident or the result of unfortunate selection of men. All their actions were symptoms of disease, the idea that government exists for what men can get out of it, and not for what they can put into it."

Symphony Concert Series Attracts Music Lovers

Sale of memberships in the Atlanta Symphony association, which makes possible the series of Sunday afternoon concerts during the fall months by Atlanta's great symphony orchestra, continued last week at the Peachtree street offices of the Phillips and Crew Piano company, and will remain active until either the limited number of memberships are disposed of, or until the concert series commences.

The great orchestra of 65 pieces, under the baton of Conductor Enrico Leide will give the first concert of the fall at Loew's Grand theater on Sunday afternoon, October 26, beginning at 3 o'clock. Seats on the first floor will be allotted to members paying $15 for the season, while the loge seats will be priced at $20. Special box memberships, calling for reservation of six or eight seat boxes, are also on sale.

Heinz Company Employees To Honor Founder's Memory

Pittsburg, Pa., September 26.—For the first time radio will be used to eliminate the distance between members of an international industrial organization when 10,000 employees of H. J. Heinz company attend a series of banquets to be served in the United States, Canada, Scotland and England. The dinner will follow the unveiling of a memorial to H. J. Heinz in the company's administration building, Progress street, on Founder's day, Saturday, October 11.

President Calvin Coolidge will speak from the white house to the diners and among other speakers will be United States Senator George Wharton Pepper and Charles M. Schwab.

The banquet was scheduled for a year ago with President Harding as the special guest of honor. As a mark of respect to the memory of the president, the banquet was postponed for a year after his death.

The memorial, erected by contributions from Heinz company employees in all parts of the world, will be unveiled at noon and the series of banquets, all connected by radio with a specially arranged dining hall in one of the large Heinz buildings in Pittsburg, will be served at hours ranging from 3:30 to 11:30 p. m., Pittsburg time, to be in accord with 6:30 p. m., in this city, at which hour Howard Heinz, president of the company, will call for the invocation.

The same menu will be served at each of the 62 banquets, and the addresses will be broadcast by Station KDKA, the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing company, to all other diners in the big group. More than 3,000 diners will be seated and served at the same time in Pittsburg.

Members of the president's cabinet, United States senators, members of the house of representatives at Washington, the governor of Pennsylvania and state, county and city officials will gather at the banquet table in Pittsburg with captains of industry and finance, masters of the professions and other leaders of thought.

With dinners served in 54 cities in this country, three in Canada, four in England and one in Scotland, the speakers in Pittsburg will talk to a comopolitan audience within the 57 family, and with 7,000 of their most interested listeners invisible.

Heinz company directors who have term of service ranging from 25 to 40 years, include Clifford S. Heinz, a son of the founder; Sebastian Mueller, N. G. Woodside, H. C. Anderson, W. H. Robinson, Charles Heinz, E. D. McCafferty, J. N. Jeffares and W. A. Kober.

When H. J. Heinz started his business in 1869, two rooms and the basement in a building in Sharpsburg and two women and a boy were sufficient to meet all requirements. Four acres produced the horseradish that was used as raw material.

On the foundation laid down in that small building, the business has grown until it reaches every trade center in the world. In the buildings of the main factory at Pittsburg there are 50 acres of floor space. Twenty-five branch factories are operated in the United States, Canada, England and Spain, and the company maintains over 300 raw products receiving stations.

To distribute the 57 Varieties, the company employs 1,400 traveling salesmen and maintains 67 branch sales offices and warehouses. In addition, its representatives are quartered in all trade centers of the world.

Heinz company operates its own printing plant, bottle factory, canmaking factory, box factory, tank factory, freight car line and tank car line.

Founder's day banquets will be held in the following cities:

England—London, Liverpool, Hull, Bristol.

Scotland—Glasgow.

Canada—Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Leamington.

United States—Albany, N. Y.; Allentown, Pa.; Baltimore, Md.; Birmingham, Ala.; Boston, Mass.; Buffalo, N. PULLMAN SURCHARGE DEFENDED BY CARRIERS

Washington, September 27.—Passenger traffic figures to show that the Pullman surcharges collected by American railroads from Pullman-car passengers are justified were presented to the interstate commerce commission today by statisticians and economists called by the carriers in their fight against the attack being made upon the surcharge by associations of traveling men.

Further statistics, upon which the Pullman company will base its contention that the rates are not unreasonable, were presented by K. L. Hyder, of the American Appraisal company of Milwaukee. Mr. Hyder was employed by the Pullman company to appraise the value of its passenger-car building plant at Chicago. He testified that the cost of reproducing the plant now would be $25,332,589 and fixed the value less depreciation at $17,851,521, as of December 31, 1922.

Where Storms Occur.

San Francisco has fewer thunderstorms than anywhere in the United States, according to 20-year records compiled by W. H. Alexander of the U. S. Weather bureau, says Popular Science Monthly for October. Tampa, Fla., has more thunderstorms than any other part of the country. Another bad spot is Santa Fe, N. M., where 1,456 storms occurred in 20 years.

TWO DEAD, THREE HURT IN ALABAMA CRASHES

Birmingham, Ala., September 27.—Two Alabamians are dead and three seriously injured as a result of automobile accidents today and late last night. Carlos E. Prater, salesman, of Millport, Ala., was instantly killed this afternoon when his car left the road at a curve near Hodges, Ala.

When James Irving, 25, of Russellville, lost control of his car last night it went over an embankment killing him and seriously injuring Louise Diseker and Thomas Underwood. The latter are in a Sheffield, Ala., hospital. Four other occupants of the car were uninjured. They were on their way to a dance at Leighton.

A fractured skull was sustained today by D. H. Morrison, 48, of Crichton, Ala., near Mobile when his wagon was struck by an automobile driven by F. W. Hermann, attorney of Mobile.

35TH DIVISION VETS CONDEMN LA FOLLETTE

Kansas City, September 27.—A resolution adopted today by the 35th Division association, a world war veterans' organization in annual convention here, condemned Robert M. La Follette, candidate for president, and said that six years ago La Follette was considered "unfit," an enemy to the country and a foe to the army and navy."

MACDONALD STAKES FATE OF CABINET

was a defense of his ministry and a vigorous demand that either the other parties cooperate with him or settle the issue at the polls. His opponents could not demonstrate, he said, that England—"her reputation or good name, her prospects of stability, or her position in the eyes of the world"—had been endangered by the labor government.

MacDonald indicated he was resigned to a departure from the premiership, if the people willed it.

"This office is a great honor," he said, "but it is an office of many burdens. The grandeur soon goes while the drudgery accumulates. Still it is a great thing to have served one's country. But if the house of commons says we must go, it will be a welcome message."

Referring to talk of an impending general election, the prime minister said:

"Everybody seems to know a lot more about this than I do."

The treaties with Russia, he said, gave England many important concessions and would open Russian markets to British manufacturers and exporters.

"The labor regime has succeeded where all others failed in getting Russia to admit her debts and establish machinery for fixing her liabilities," he declared.

"We have not settled our claims (against Russia), but we have drafted a document that will settle them. The difficulty in settling the Russian question was a legacy from the Lloyd George government. Lloyd George waged war on Russia and now the Russians have presented counter-claims to us for the damage he caused them.

No Loan Proposed.

"We do not propose to give a loan to Russia, but to guarantee a loan to her. It has been said this loan will be for more than 100 million pounds, but I can assure you that not one third of that huge sum ever has been mentioned."

MacDonald urged the principle of limiting world armaments through the league of nations, which he advanced recently at Geneva.

"This government has got the peace of the world in mind," he said. "It intends to render something other than mere lip service in this connection. The labor government will yet establish conditions under which men will have no fear of war."

Russia must be brought into the comity of nations, the premier added, before European peace could be insured.

Boils Pimples and Blackheads

Why worry and fret—wish and hope? Why be jealous of those with clear, soft skin? It is within reach of all.

A RICH, RUDDY, wholesome complexion is possible. It is not something that is just beyond your reach. Neither is it something that requires years and years of toil to acquire.

But you must have a foundation for a clear and beautiful complexion. You can be sure of this: Nature has no substitute for red-blood-cells. So-called skin disorders—pimples — blackheads—boils and kindred disorders are nothing less than billboards announcing that the blood is in a disordered condition. More red-blood-cells! You can try everything under the sun—you'll find only one answer. More cell-power in your blood. The amazing results produced by an increase in red-blood-cells, is one of the A B C's of medical science. Red-cells mean clear, pure, rich blood. They mean clear, ruddy, lovable complexions. They mean nerve-power, because all your nerves are fed by your blood. They mean freedom forever from the blackheaded pest; pimples, boils; from eczema and from rheumatism impurities, too. From that tired, rundown feeling. Red-blood-cells are the most important thing in the world to each of us. S.S.S. will aid Nature in building them for you! S.S.S. has been known since 1826 as one of the greatest blood-builders, blood-cleansers and system strengtheners ever produced. U. S. TRADE BODY IN GRAIN PROBE

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.

Washington, September 27.—An investigation into margins and profits of terminal middlemen was instituted today by the federal trade commission.

The inquiry, the commission announced, will be started immediately at Chicago, to be carried on later at other centers.

The investigation was instituted at the request of the Illinois Agricultural association and it will cover the last four crop years, especial attention being given to the wheat crops.

The basis of the request, it was explained, is the desire of the farmers of the country to have the most recent information regarding the margins and profits of the middlemen in terminal markets, especially in view of the movement for farmers' cooperative organizations in this business.

INVESTIGATION ASKED TO GET INFORMATION.

Chicago, September 27.—The investigation by the federal trade commission into margins and profits of terminal grain middlemen was requested by the Illinois Agricultural association because of the valuable data and information such an investigation will produce, George Fox, of Sycamore, Ill., secretary of the association, said tonight.

The agricultural association for some time has been investigating the grain marketing company, a merger of several large grain companies, which it is planned eventually to make farmer-controlled and operated. Mr. Fox said the federal trade commission had made a study of the terminal grain middlemen situation and had published its findings, which extended up to 1920.

This information was found to be valuable, but is not up-to-date, Mr. Fox said, explaining that the federal trade commission's findings on the situation, when brought up to date, may have an important bearing on whether the Illinois Agricultural association indorses or rejects the grain marketing company project.

RECORD RAINFALL IN LAURENS COUNTY

Dublin, Ga., September 27.—(Special.)—Since September 14 a total of 10 inches of rain has fallen in Dublin, the heaviest rainfall recorded in the month of September in many years.

Cotton is reported to be sprouting in the bolls and there is prospect of more or less damage to the crop that way. Beyond that the rain is good for the sweet poratoes and sugar cane crop.

Annual Revision Of Finance Sheet Studied Monday

The annual revision of the October finance sheet will be considered Monday morning at a meeting of the finance committee of council. According to announcement of City Comptroller B. Graham West, there will be few changes from the June finance sheet, and probably not more than $50,000 will be involved.

There will be no new appropriations, as the increase in revenue, approximately $40,000, is not more than is necessary for operation of various departments. The increase in receipts resulting from the raise in water rates will be turned over to the school department.

It is probable that heads of several departments will ask additional appropriations, but, according to Mr. West, it is practically certain that none will be granted because of the fact that the city already has spent all money anticipated in revenues.

Apportionments are made annually in January, appropriations are made in June, and the sheet revised every October. The October revision usually consists of transferring funds appropriated to one department, and, not needed in that department, to another department in which the original appropriation has proven insufficient.

Alderman W. B. Duvall, acting chairman of the finance committee, will preside at the meeting. If the revised sheet is approved by the committee, it must go to council for approval.

LAURENS LAYS PLANS FOR TOBACCO ACREAGE

Dublin, Ga., September 27.—(Special.)—Laurens county farmers are preparing to plant a limited tobacco acreage next year, the first that has been planted here on anything like a commercial scale.

At a meeting held the past week by the chamber of commerce for the purpose of discussing tobacco acreage in Laurens, a great many farmers and a number of business men were present. It developed at this meeting that the sentiment is strong for trying tobacco in the county, and 220 acres were pledged as an initial start for the county-wide canvass to ascertain how much acreage will be planted, and to properly distribute the trained tobacco demonstrators who will be needed for this crop.

It is hardly expected that the acreage will amount to anything like large commercial proportions because the farmers must first learn how to grow the crop. This means a small acreage per farm as an experiment.

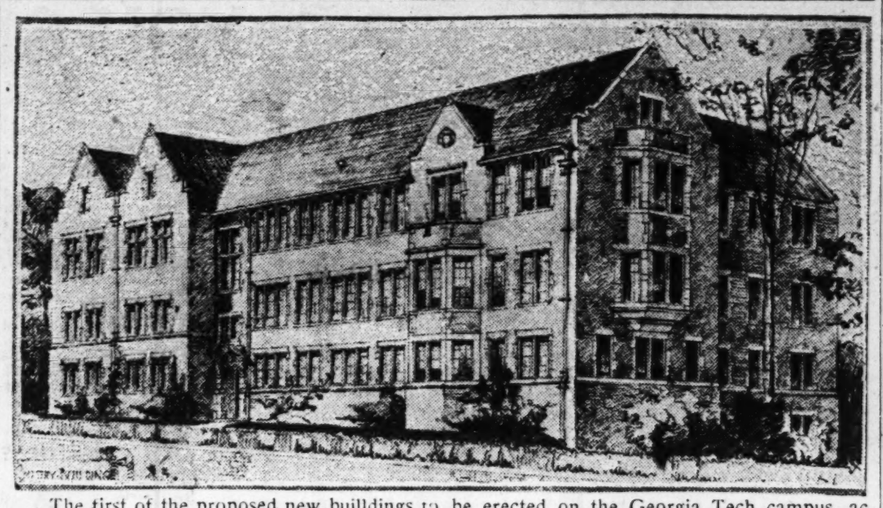

Messages from North Carolina tobacco warehousemen were read at the meeting, stating that experienced warehousemen were ready to open a tobacco warehouse at Dublin just as soon as a crop was ready to market. Also the matter of establishing a redrying plant is being considered, and if the crop assumes much size in the county this plant is likely.

One demonstrator was present at this meeting, J. A. Bragg, who had managed a crop of 12 acres this year for Captain W. B. Rice, near Dublin. The net profit on these 12 acres, according to Captain Rice, was $1,000, after all possible deductions had been made against the crop. This was the first year Captain Rice had planted tobacco.

Tobacco growers have stated that the land in Laurens county is especially adapted to growing tobacco, and they have no doubt but that the crop can be made to pay here. There are several nearby counties where this crop can be grown easily whose products can be marketed at Dublin easily, making this a splendid location for a warehouse and redrying plant.

Just how much acreage will be put in cannot be known until the county-wide canvass is made, but it is certain that a good many farmers will try out this new crop next year.

Work Begins Soon on Chemistry Building As Part of Plans for Greater Georgia Tech

The first of the proposed new builldings to be erected on the Georgia Tech campus, according to plans of the Greater Georgia Tech campaign, will be a $100,000 chemistry building.

Plans are complete and work is soon to begin on the new $100,000 chemistry building at Georgia Tech, it was announced Saturday. Proposed as an addition, the new building will be so much more pretentious in its size and equipment as to place the old chemistry building in the light of an addition to the new, it is pointed out.

Pringle and Smith, architects, have followed out the original motion by Clark Howell, of the board of trustees, in designing it in complete uniformity of other buildings on the North avenue campus.

President Brittain stated yesterday there is now enough money on hand to complete the building, the money being furnished by the Greater Georgia Tech campaign fund, which has already supplied $50,000 for the completion of the building now housing the physics and architectural departments. In addition to completion of this building, $5,000 of the fund has been expended for the enlargement of the campus foundry, $10,000 for remodeling the Knowles dormitory and $1,500 expended on the Swann dormitory.

Georgia Tech trustees decided on remodeling of the two dormitories and the enlargement of the campus foundry because the Georgia legislature for some time has failed to appropriate money for repairs of any kind.

The Lyman Hall laboratory of chemistry, named in honor of the second president of the institution, which merges into the new building as an old wing of the building, was completed in 1906. It is T-shaped, built of brick, with limestone trimmings, two stories high and with a basement.

In addition to many new lecture rooms, stock rooms, offices, combustion room and dark rooms, the architects have with special care planned the laboratories as to light and ventilation. For the removal of noxious fumes, they are amply provided with hoods, each of which has a separate flue leading to an air-tight wooden fume box, located under the roof.

Rome, Ga., September 27.—(Special.)—"Swifty" Johnson, held in jail here, is believed by officers to be the head of a gang of auto thieves. Johnson has been out of town and came back to Rome to settle some personal affairs, when he was arrested by city officers.

Johnson was arrested on a warrant charging theft of the automobile of Harry Burks. Theft insurance rates on Rome cars have mounted over 100 per cent because of the alleged operations of Johnson's men.

Johnson has served two terms on the Floyd gang for stealing automobiles.

Johnson was riding in a machine driven by Charles Grace when officers began chasing him. He jumped from the car and started running. Sheriff Harris stated that other arrests would follow.

AMERICUS COUNCIL WILL RESET DATE FOR BOND VOTING

Americus, Ga., September 27.—(Special.)—City council at a special meeting has rescinded the call for a bond election to be held here October 22, and a new election will be called for the nearest possible date when the electors will be asked to decide upon the issuance of $100,000 in serial improvement bonds. The reason given for rescinding the original election call is that the proposition to issue 30-year bonds, after consideration, was deemed inexpedient.

Instead the bonds will be issued so they can be retired in amounts of $3,000 annually, together with the interest thereon. It is stated that serial bonds can be sold as advantageously as the 30-year bonds, whereas an enormous saving in interest may be effected.

The issue will be used, if voted, for the improvement of the streets in Americus' business section and for the erection of new housing facilities at the pumping station of the Americus municipal waterworks. Of the total to be issued, $75,000 will be street improvement bonds and $25,000 waterworks bonds, and the bond issue proposal has already been indorsed by practically every civic organization in Americus.

DEMOCRATIC DRIVE IN WEST PREPARED

Chicago, September 27.—(By the Associated Press.)—A concerted drive during October by the democratic national candidates and other party dignitaries, including William G. McAdoo and William Jennings Bryan, was discussed informally during an all-day conference here today between Governor Charles Bryan, of Nebraska, democratic vice-presidential nominee, and western party managers.

No official announcement was forthcoming when the conferees left party headquarters early tonight. It was understood, however, that the conference consisted chiefly of a general discussion of future campaign plans and late reports from national headquarters at Washington regarding speaking dates.

"It was very evident," Governor Bryan said following the long meeting, "that the conferees were in entire accord as to the manner in which the campaign was being conducted and the part each was taking to bring about election of the democratic national ticket."

Earlier in the day, the vice-presidential nominee told newspapermen that the outlook for victory was "very encouraging" with prospects of the democrats carrying Nebraska, Wyoming, Kansas, Mexico and Colorado. Reports were too incomplete to base a prediction as to South Dakota and Iowa, he said, although these too were encouraging.

GEN. D. B. MORGAN TO AID IN PROBE OF SOLDIERS' HOME

Savannah, Ga., September 27.—(Special).—General D. B. Morgan, commander of the southern division of the United Confederate Veterans, will go to Atlanta October 1, to be present at a special investigation into the affairs of the Soldiers' home by a special legislative committee headed by Representative Smith of Bryan county.

DENTAL CLINICS MAY BE INCLUDED IN CITY SCHOOLS

Plans for enlarging the scope of health work in grammar schools of the city by establishing several dental clinics were discussed Saturday at a meeting of the school health committee, of which Miss Gussie Brown, of Kirdwood school, is chairman.

The Fifth District Medical association has offered assistance if the clinics are provided and equipped and it is planned to seek aid of Parent-Teachers' organizations in various sections of the city in raising funds for establishing of the centers. The dental association has agreed to furnish dentists for the various clinics free of charge to help city dentists with the work.

Clinics are proposed for benefit of students whose parents are unable to afford proper care of the youngster's teeth.

New Board of Trustees Named for Gate City Guard Made Up of Members of "Atlanta's Own" Regiment

Trustees of the Gate City guard, recently reorganized here as a social and military organization, are, left to right: Sergeant Joseph L. Spencer, Sergeant Esmond P. Gue, Captain Harry Heins, supply officer of the 122d infantry; Colonel Eugene Oberdorfer, executive officer of the 122d infantry; Captain Roy LeCraw, commanding Company "B," 122d infantry; Lieutenant Ray A. Nixon, also of Company "B," and Regimental Sergeant Major Babb. The trustees are selected from former members of the Gate City guard who are aligned with the 122d infantry, Georgia National guard.

The Gate City guard was incorporated in 1859 by the Georgia legislature as a military and social organization, composed of voluntary members. It was in those days an exclusive and select club. In 1861 it was mustered into the Confederate army and served with honor throughout the war between the states. When the war closed it resumed its previous status as a peace-time social organization and thus continued to exist in that situation for many years.

In the meantime, by means of entertainments, membership dues and other sources of revenue, it acquired considerable property, which in due time enhanced in value with the growth of Atlanta. The possession and disposition of this property became the subject of numerous bitterly contested law suits in the courts of Georgia. Efforts were made at various times to have the property divided up and sold for the benefit of individual members who ceased to belong to the Gate City guard and who contended that they were joint owners of the same by reason of their membership in the corporation. In each instance the supreme court decided that the property must be held intact for the benefit of the corporation regardless of changes that may have occurred in its personnel.

Plan Was Resisted.

When the Fifth Georgia regiment of the organized national guard of Georgia was created the colonel sought to have the Gate City guard enter the regiment as a company thereof. This was resisted by many of the members who had originally joined for purely social reasons and who were averse to the rigors of regular drills and military discipline. Finally, the colonel was successful and the company was confronted with the alternative of joining the regiment or of disbanding as a military organization. It was arranged, however, that those who preferred the purely social side of their comradeship should be known as "The Old Guard," and the strictly military side of the company entered the Fifth Georgia regiment as "The Gate City guard" and was designated as company L in that regiment.

The valuable property was held by a board of trustees for the benefit of the military company, and thus company L of the Fifth Georgia regiment possessed assets that made it one of the richest companies in the country.

Old Members Aid.

Meanwhile the so-called old guard became one of Atlanta's established civic and social institutions and is now composed of many of the leading citizens of the community. These men, most of whom are now advanced in years, have ever stood behind every movement for the advancement of the city and have given great aid in fostering a healthy sentiment in behalf of the organized militia.

When the World war came upon the country all military units that were taken into the United States army had to forsake their their pre-war status, and so company L found itself bereft of the enjoyment of the property formerly owned by it, and the latter continued to be administered by a board of trustees. At the conclusion of the war, with the membership of company L, or the old Gate City guard, mustered out, it was discovered that the trustees were in possession of valuable property rights, but without any beneficiary for whom the property could be held.

Finally, it was determined that with the formation of the new regiment in Atlanta in 1922 that the company of that regiment which presented the best claim as the successors of the old Gate City guard, by reason of general military excellence, was company F of the 122d infantry, then commanded by Captain Eugene Oberdorfer, Jr., and so a new board of trustees was created, and after due application to the courts and a course of litigation, the right of company F to become the successor to old company L and to be known as the Gate City guard was formally recognized.

Trustees Hold Fund.

Thereupon the property was decreed to be sold and the money derived therefrom to be held by the new trustees for the benefit of this new organization.

In the meantime, however, by reason of the expansion of the Atlanta battalion of the national guard into a full regiment a new obstacle was met. In due time, however, with the same tenacity that had marked the previous contests, it was decided that those members of company F who belonged to that organization on March 4, 1924, should be deemed members of the Gate City guard, regardless of what companies of the 122d infantry they are now affiliated with. So the Gate City guard now finds itself again a purely social and military organization within a regiment. It will have distinctive uniforms, insignia and other means of identification, and the members are very proud of their new distinction.

INDIAN PUBLICIST WILL LECTURE HERE

Jinarajadasa, noted Indian publicist and mystic, who is passing through the United States en route from Madras to London, will deliver two lectures on September 29 and 30, at the Ansley roof garden at 8:15 o'clock.

Jinarajadasa has been called "a practical mystic," because he is said to present the transcendental philosophy of the Orient in the precise language of the Occident. He is a linguist with several languages at his command and puts into eloquent, forceful English a logical and scientific presentation of the Oriental philosophy, his followers assert. He was born in Ceylon and educated in Europe, but has divided his half century of life betwen the Orient and the Occident. He has traveled widely and is the author of many books, including "Art and the Emotions," "How We Remember Past Lives," "The Nature of Mysticism" and "The Message of the Future."

The subjects of the lectures are "The Spiritual Factor in National Life" and "The Coming Christ and His Message." The public is invited.

WELL-KNOWN WOMAN DIES IN JOHNSON

Wrightsville, Ga., September 26.—(Special.)—Funeral services for Mrs. Nettie Crawford, 48, widow of the late M. Crawford, of Johnson county, who died Thursday, were held Friday afternoon at the home of her mother, Mrs. Mary A. Page, near here. Mrs. Crawford was the daughter of the late Judge and Mrs. William A. Page and a member of the pioneer Walker and Page families of this section. She was well known throughout this section. She had been in ill-health for several years, never having fully recovered from the sudden death of her husband a few years ago. For the past few months her condition has been grave and death, while not wholly unexpected, came as a tremendous shock to her wide acquaintance and to members of her family.

Mrs. Crawford is survived by her mother, three sons and three daughter, two brothers, Judge J. E. Page, of Dublin, and Cleveland Page, of Wrightsville; and four sisters, Mrs. John D. Wilson, of Rockledge; Mrs. E. J. Nobles, of Helena; Mrs. Joe Jenkins and Mrs. J. A. Sumner, of this county.

NATIONAL MACCABEE HEAD TO VISIT STATE

News of the visit to Atlanta on November 26, 27 and 28 of National Commander Frye, of the Maccabees, was received here late Saturday by State Commander R. E. Leatherman. The purpose of the visit, it is learned, is for a conference between the national commander and Georgia officials pertaining to the proposed caravan to Washington next year.

Preparations have been underway in Atlanta for several weeks for the entertainment of several hundred Maccabees from southern states who will pass through here en route to the national convention next year. The big motorcade, the first on such a gigantic scale ever attempted in the south, will move on Washington early next July. Southern Maccabees will be routed through Atlanta and efforts are being made to so arrange the schedule as to permit the visitors to stop off here for two days.

M. D. Gleason, past state commander for Georgia, has been named traffic director general for the south, and will be in complete charge of all tours, side trips and stop-overs, in addition to the schedule proper of the big caravan.

WOMAN'S DIVISION OF LOCAL CHAMBER SEEKING MEMBERS

The "recruiting" team headed by Mrs. Rae S. Addis is leading in the membership campaign being waged by the Woman's division of the Atlanta chamber of commerce, according to figures made public Saturday by officials of the organization.

Mrs. P. H. ilbert, chairman of the membership campaign committee, expressed confidence Saturday that the membership of the Woman's division will be doubled as a result of the drive. Activity in this direction was started immediately following the decision at a meeting last Monday to strike out for such a goal.

Three prizes will be awarded in the campaign. One of these prizes will go to the group leader whose force brings in the greatest number of new members; another will go to the captain whose team brings in the greatest number of new members, and the third prize will go to the individual bringing in the greatest number.

DR. WILMER ENDS WORK HERE TODAY

Today Rev. Dr. C. B. Wilmer, rector of St. Luke's Episcopal church, will conclude his last Sunday as such with the celebration of early communion at 8 o'clock and Holy communion and sermon at 11 o'clock.

On his departure for the University of the South at Sewanee, he becomes rector emeritus of St. Luke's parish by unanimous vote of the vestry of St. Luke's church.

Dr. Wilmer, who is recognized as one of the foremost members of the Episcopal clergy and one of the civic leaders of the country, came to Atlanta as rector of St. Luke's church in September of 1900, when that church was located at the corner of Houston and North Pryor streets.

New Home Erected.

Since that time, the present handsome edifice has been erected on Peachtree street at Alexander street.

In a few weeks, the new $50,000 parish house and Sunday school room adjoining the church building will be completed and opened for services.

Dr. Wilmer has the unique distinction of having been a delegate to the general convention for the years of 1907, 1910, 1913, 1916, 1919 and 1922.

He is chairman of the subcommittee of the commission of the general convention for the revision of the prayer book lectionary. For a number of years he was president of the standing committee of the diocese of Atlanta, and for the past year and a half, chairman of the social service committee of the diocese.

Active in Welfare Work.

Dr. Wilmer has always taken a leading part in the welfare work of the city, south and nation. He is chairman of the white committee on race relations composed of Dr. Ashby Jones, pastor of the Ponce de Leon Avenue Baptist church; Dr. Plato Durham, of Emory university; Dr. W. W. Alexander, secretary of the commission on inter-racial relations of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, and E. Marvin Underwood, prominent attorney.

In 1912, and again in 1918, he was chosen to head the Atlanta Evangelical Ministers' association, the membership of which body includes the ministers of Atlanta and vicinity of all denominations.

In speaking of this work, James Morton, secretary of the Atlanta Evangelical Ministers' association, says:

Morton's Tribute.

"Clearness of perception, keenness of intellect and absolute fearlessness, combined with a consuming zeal for the application of the teachings of Jesus in every phase of life, made him a leader among men; while richness of his humor and his love for mankind has, in a most peculiar way endeared him to those so constantly associated with him in the work of the Kingdom.

"Dr. Wilmer will be missed nowhere so deeply as in the Ministers' association, and our hearts go with him to his new work together with our prayer that God's richest blessings may abide with him."

Dr. Wilmer is also vice president of the board of trustees of Atlanta university, and has been practically during his entire residence in Atlanta.

While joining the faculty of the University of the South (Sewanee) as professor of theology, his duties there leave him free to preach on Sundays. He has been named as one of the university preachers of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, N. C., and will preach on Sunday night, October 19.

L. S. Montgomery, in charge of merchandising for Georgia, is in charge of the conference and leads discussions.

Among groups who have visited the exhibition are the sales force of the Georgia Railway and Power company, under Mr. Morehead, the Gillam-Schoen Electric company's men, and representatives of the Premier Service company and other dealers in Atlanta.

This conference is being held in order to begin the promotion of the movement to sell electrical appliances as Christmas gifts, it is stated.

CUMMINGS TO MAKE TENNESSEE SPEECHES

Chattanooga, Tenn., September 27. In a telegram received here today, Homer Cummings, former national democratic chairman, declined an invitation to come here on October 11 to deliver an address, but stated that he expected to come to Tennessee later in the month for several addresses. He did not fix the dates or places.

Vouchers Mailed To Tax Receivers For 1924 Digest

Vouchers to pay the tax receivers in the various counties of Georgia for their work on the 1924 state tax digest have been mailed out by W. B. Harrison, tax clerk in the comptroller general's office, it was announced Saturday.

The vouchers total approximately $120,000, which is a little more than was paid out in 1923, it was stated.

BRILLIANT ORGANIST ARRIVES IN ATLANTA

Grace Chalmers Thomson, nationally-known organist and choir leader, has arrived in Atlanta from New York, where she was organist and leader of the choir of Grace Episcopal church, and will assume her new work in this capacity Sunday at St. Philip's cathedral.

GRACE CHALMERS THOMSON.

The brilliant organist received her degree as music bachelor from Oberlin college and holds the degree of "associate" to the American Guild of Organists. A more complete record of her achievements in the world of music is carried in "International, Who's Who in Music" and in the "Musical Book of America."

One of the first invitations extended to Miss Thomason has been for a recital this fall before the American Guild of Organists, of which Miss Dora Duck, organist of St. Luke's church, is dean. Miss Thomason is reorganizing the cathedral choir and probably bill organize a junior choir, giving special attention to the training of children's voices. June 1 of this year Miss Thomson gave an hour at the Wesley Memorial organ in this city.

On July 5 of this year Miss Thomson appeared in recital at St. Paul's church, New Orleans, which elicited most favorable comments from the press of that city.

Another of the outstanding successes of Miss Thomson was "The Passion According to St. Matthew," given in Carnegie hall, New York, in which the Parnassus club choral, of which Miss Thomson was director, acquitted itself most creditably in connection with the orchestra of the New York symphony, according to critics. Miss Thomson has achieved much fame through compositions which she has in the various church positions and which the people of Atlanta will enjoy at the regular services of the cathedral and various recitals the coming musical season.

ATLANTANS URGED TO PARTICIPATE IN EASTERN MEET

Atlanta business men who attend the mid-year meeting of the Eastern division of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States at Washington, October 23 and 24, are urged to be prepared to participate actively in the discussion of important business questions which will come up for discussion. Word to this effect was received Saturday by officers of the Atlanta chamber of commerce from headquarters of the Eastern division at Washington.

The subjects listed are: "Waste and Extravagance in Business Government," "Are Taxes Reducing Living Standards?" "Government Ownership and Operation" and "The United States Chamber of Commerce as an Aid to Business."

To allow the greatest possible time for informal discussion of these four subjects, especially in their relation to business in the seventeen states in the Eastern division, the program has been arranged so that there will be only one formal address on each subject. The speakers will be business men of national prominence, it was stated. Following the introduction of each subject, the delegates will be invited to take part in an open discussion. In this way, it is expected that the meeting will bring out the sentiment of business men in the states along the Atlantic seaboard on these questions.

YOU POOR KID, WHY ARE YOU SO SKINNY?

Don't your mother know that Cod Liver Oil will put pounds of good healthy flesh on your bones in just a few weeks?

Tell her every druggist has it in sugar-coated tablet form now so that you won't have to take the nasty, fishy-tasting oil that is apt to upset the stomach.

Tell her that McCoy's Cod Liver Oil Tablets are chock-full of vitamines and are the greatest flesh producers and health builders she can find.

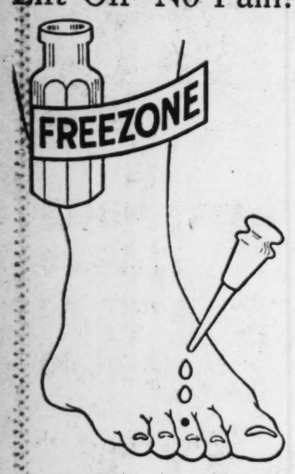

One sickly, thin kid, aged 9, gained 12 pounds in 7 months.

She must ask Jacobs' Pharmacy Co. or any good druggist for McCoy's Cod Liver Oil Tablets—60 tablets, 60 cents—as pleasant to take as candy.

Dawes Hailed "Regular Guy"

IS SHY OF FAME AS COMPOSER OF MUSICAL SCORES

By Children of Home Town

CHARLES G. DAWES.

Better known to the public for his "Hell and Maria" than as the composer of the "Melody in A."

This is the fourth of a series of close-up interviews with the leading presidential and vice presidential candidates written exclusively for The Constitution and the North American Newspaper Alliance. An interview with Charles W. Bryan will appear Tuesday and one with Burton K. Wheeler on Thursday.

BY PAUL R. LEACH.

"There can be no reaction to the right that is not the right reaction."

There, in a few words, is contained a large part of the philosophy of Charles Gates Dawes, republican nominee for the vice presidency. The epigram that is destined to become famous in this campaign was General Dawes' response to a newspaper correspondent's question as to reactions following the part of the candidate's speech at Augusta, Maine, condeming the Ku Klux Klan.

Right! That in one word is the Dawes creed. Right is right, in his estimation, and he will take plenty of time to prove to you, should you care to enter into an argument about it, that might is not right, never was and never will be.

Is Man of Millions.

He is a man of considerable wealth, residing in one of Evanston's mansions. Of colonial American stock he had ancestors of renown, and his wife is a descendant of General Israel Putnam. He is a chairman of the board of directors of the Central Trust Company of Illinois, and director and large stockholder in many corporations. Yet General Dawes is distinctly a man of simple tastes. And he is perhaps the most talked of man in the world because of his work on the so-called Dawes plan to bring about the economic peace of Europe. Even that, however, does not constitute his sole claim to wide recognition for eminent services performed. The governmental business of the United States is now conducted for the first time in its history upon a budget plan. Charles Dawes passed a year in Washington doing that piece of work. Then there is the big task so ably performed by him of keeping the American army in France in supplies of all sorts.

His Physical and Mental Vigor.

Charles Gates Dawes was born August 27, 1965—so now he is 59 years old—at Marietta, Ohio. He looks much nearer 40 than 60, especially when telling a story and he is a cracking good story teller. He is extremely active, mentally and physically. Whatever he is doing, that thing is uppermost in his mind.

He was educated in the common schools of Marietta and at Marietta College, where he was graduated at the age of 19. Working as a civil engineer, he earned money to put himself through the Cincinnati law school.

But he has more education now than either of those schools could possibly give. For instance, he taught himself music, never having had lessons from a teacher, learning first to play a flute, then a piccolo, which instrument he played in the Marietta band as a youngster; then came the piano. He has composed numerous airs, several of which were orchestrated in Chicago a few years ago. One piece he composed was taken up by Fritz Kreisler as a popular part of his concert repertoire and renamed by Kreisler "Melody in A." Mr. Dawes is extremely shy of the artistic side of his nature and resents the publication of stories about him as a composer, but he is pleased at honest appreciation of any of his compositions.

Meeting Ground of Future Great.

After graduation from law school young Dawes went to Lincoln, Neb., to practice law.

"Why did you choose Lincoln?" he was asked.

"Had an uncle there, just been elected governor of the state," Dawes replied. "Thought that would be a good place for me."

"Was it?"

"Well, it was profitable in the friends I made."

There was a restaurant operated by a man named Don Cameron, where pretty fair food could be had at 25 cents a meal, Dawes ate there. At the same time a young army officer named John J. Pershing, recently assigned from West Point to teach military tactics to the Nebraska State university undergraduates, often ate at the same place. That was the beginning of the friendship of Dawes and Pershing which brought Dawes to the post of purchasing agent for the entire American expeditionary forces during the world war.

Friendship for His Opponent.

William Jennings Bryan and his brother Charles were also patrons of Cameron's. Dawes and they became good friends. A few days ago some one made a disparaging remark concerning Charles Bryan. Dawes was quick to resent it.

"Charlie's all right," Dawes snapped. "I've known him long enough to be certain that though his methods of campaigning may be different from mine, he's honest."

At Lincoln the farmers were being discriminated against by the railroads. They engaged Lawyer Dawes—because they had little money and Dawes' fees were not high. They wanted government regulation of railroad rates, and the fuss that Dawes kicked up ultimately resulted in the formation of the interstate commerce commission.

About that time Dawes returned to Marietta and married Miss Caro D. Blymer.

Finds Falsity of Fable.

"I'd been told that a fellow could get along on $80 a month," says the general. "But it took pretty close to $100. Mrs. Dawes was a mighty good manager, though, or we'd never have squeaked through."

Public utilities began to loom to far-seeing men at that time as among the great industries of the future. Through his legal connections in Lincoln Dawes became interested in gas companies. In 1894 he moved to La Crosse, Wis., deserting the law business for good in an overnight decision. He organized the La Crosse Gas company, became its president, then moved to Evanston. Business men of Chicago, knowing of his work at La Crosse and Evanston, kept their eyes on him. Samuel Insull was forming his group of public utilities. The Evanston company was purchased at a fat figure, becoming the nucleus of the Public Service Company of Northern Illinois. That was Dawes' first big financial cleanup. His public utility holdings alone are said to be worth close to $5,000,000.

How He Went Into Politics.

In Marietta, when one asks about General Dawes, one will get a biography of Rufus R. Dawes, the father of Charles Dawes. The former commanded the Iron brigade in the civil war. William McKinley had been an army comrade of General Rufus R. Dawes. In 1896, though he was only a young fellow and a newcomer, Charles Dawes organized the state for McKinley and won an indorsement. He became the youngest member of the republican national committee's executive body. McKinley, elected, made Dawes comptroller of the currency.

His characteristic method of doing what politicians call "raising hell with things generally," became known nationally then.

Dawes personally is very neat. An illuminating story is told of him during his administration as comptroller. Often there came calls from President McKinley for Dawes. When such a call reached him, he always washed his hands and face. He was asked why, when the calls were very urgent, he took time to visit the washstand.

Drawls His Answer.

"Well," Dawes drawled, "in Europe when one is summoned before the chief of the country's administration, he puts on short pants, fusses up generally, and, in some places even puts on a powdered wig. Now we don't do anything like that here. But the least I can do when summoned by the president is to go with a clean face."

When Dawes returned to Chicago, he was inveigled into running for the senate. That was in 1902. He was unmercifully beaten, and there was the thought in many minds that he had been "double-crossed" by Boss William Lorimer. Dawes returned to Chicago from Springfield with Malcolm McDowell, his political manager, and J. L. Pelton, now of Erie, Pa., who was then his secretary. The next morning as McDowell walked into Dawes' office he heard somebody whistling merrily. McDowell was curious. Who could be so gay in that office, where everything should have been wrapped in gloom?

The whistler proved to be Dawes.

"Well, Malcolm," Dawes said in greeting him, "it's all fixed, born over night."

"What's fixed?" McDowell demanded.

"Why, the bank—Central Trust Company of Illinois," Dawes replied calmly. He whistled a few measures, then added, "we'll have $2,000,000 capital and a million surplus. Come on, get busy."

"In three weeks," says Pelton, "we had raised three times the amount of money required."

Tragedy of His Son's Death.

Two children were born to General and Mrs. Dawes; a son, Rufus Fearing Dawes, and a daughter, Carolyn, now Mrs. Melvin B. Ericson, of Evanston. While at home on vacation from Princeton university a day or so before he was to return for his senior year the boy, Rufus, was drowned in Lake Geneva. That was on September 6, 1912. Charles Dawes' life had been built around his son. Dawes expressed some of his emotions in a tribute he wrote, which was read by a clergyman at the funeral.

"My boy was imperious. He recognized no superior on earth, and yet was the tender and intimate friend of the weak and the humble. I have taken him with me among the greatest in the nation and looked in vain for any evidence in him of awe, or even curiosity. He has taken me, asking me to help them, among the poor and lowly of the earth."

Besides his written words General Dawes constructed another memorial to his son.

"Rufus and I had talked it over for a long time," Dawes said to this writer, "and his ideas concerned the building of a hotel in the west side district of Chicago where men are down, but can be helped out. When my boy passed, I carried on the work there he wanted done."

Caring for the Unfortunate.

That work was the construction of the Rufus F. Dawes hotel and the organization of the Rufus Fearing Dawes association. The hotel can care for 500 men a night with bed and bath, each paying a very nominal sum. A similar hotel was built in Boston by Dawes.

"We've had nearly 2,000,000 guests since the Chicago hotel was organized," he said.

In memory of his mother, Mary Gates Dawes, he built the Mary Gates Dawes home in Chicago, where working girls of no parental residence in Chicago may have home-like quarters.

General and Mrs. Dawes are not society folk, don't care a hang for it. To judge by estimates that have been made to me of their personal charity and pension lists it would seem that their principal idea of assistance to their fellows is helping those less fortunate than themselves. But even among their closest friends and relatives they do not say what those charities are.

Is a "Regular Guy."

Their two foster children, Dana McCutcheon Dawes, 12, and Virginia Dawes, 10, are the delight of the neighborhood in Evanston, not alone because they are naturally popular youngsters, but because through them the Evanston boys and girls find Charles Dawes a playmate who—well, one youngster from west of the tracks who has tramped more than once over the Sheridan road and inserted himself into the games and contests that Dawes is forever organizing for them, says he is nothing short of a "regular guy."

In his big brown house Mr. Dawes has a beautiful library, including many original manuscripts.

"Since 1912 I have spent most of my leisure here," General Dawes said recently, indicating the shelves of handsomely-bound books. Then his eyes flickered in amusement. "Here and out in the yard with Dana and the rest of young Evanston," he added.

"What's your favorite book?" he was asked.

"'The Count of Monte Cristo' for a novel," was the reply. "I'm not sure of the rest. 'Pickwick Papers' comes pretty close to the top. Read that book every year."

Breaking Into the War.

In 1917 the United States cast its resources into the war. Charles Dawes, past 50 years of age, one of the most restless and nervously active men in the country, anyhow—seldom is he able to sit through a meal at home or elsewhere, striding about the room between courses—grew more restless every day. He couldn't enlist, the lowest commission he could obtain at his age was that of major—and the training camps would not have him. Among others he appealed to Samuel M. Felton, president of the Chicago Great Western railroad, the director of transportation.

"I'm going!" he said repeatedly to B. F. Blye, his secretary for many years at the bank. "I'm going if I have to sneak off and carry water for the mules. Sam Felton's got to—say. I'm an engineer. Sam Felton can do it."

And Sam Felton did. Dawes had his commission as major. He joined the 17th regiment, railroad construction engineers, and went to France.

Pershing was organizing the A. E. F. Dawes had scarcely landed in France when he was put on Pershing's staff. But did Dawes get a soft job there? Not on your life! Pershing didn't have any soft job men. Dawes became general purchasing agent for the A. E. F.

A story leaked out not long ago that concerned the smuggling of some mules across the Pyrenees from Spain, sympathetic to Germany, for use by the army in France. General Dawes was asked if it was true that he smuggled out the animals.

"Huh!" he grunted. "Had to have mules. We broke every law in Europe to get supplies for our armies, and just totally ruined red tape at home. But we got supplies."

Drafted for More Work.

Following the armistice he was made a member of the liquidation commission, which engaged his attention until August, 1919, when he returned to his bank. But he did not remain there long. President Harding insisted that he become first director of the budget and Dawes accepted on condition that he be permitted to resign after a year. When the budget job was finished he returned wearily to Chicago and said he'd never again be in public life. But President Coolidge thought differently. Dawes was virtually drafted to sit with the international committee of experts to work out a solution of the problem of after-war reparations.

Dawes returned to Chicago a few months ago and soon was drafted again, this time by the republican convention.

Dawes and his underslung pipe and his cuss words are pretty familiar to the American people. Upon his return from France Dawes was called to testify about war costs before the senatorial investigating committee. He was questioned about expenditures in the A. E. F. until he finally got mad.

"Hell maria!" he barked. "I'd have paid horse prices for sheep—if they could have pulled artillery." They let Dawes alone after that.

But his profanity is of the harmless variety. Much of the published reports of Dawes' cussing is smart aleck writing by inexperienced reporters. He carries a stenographer on tour now, and has a complete record of every word uttered in public.

On The Ku Klux Issue.

That Maine speech had the politicians of his party scared to death, for Dawes criticised the Ku Klux Klan.

"What's the objection to discussing what everybody's talking about?" Dawes demanded. "They say I'm out of place in this campaign. Huh! I'm not out of place in any campaign where the constitution is believed in. This is a fight. The republican party has been challenged by La Follette, who would alter the American constitution. The republican party can win if it gets out the votes, and the way to get out the votes is to start a fight. This campaign is going to be fought in a prize ring, not on a feather bed."

Constitutional government campaigns are nothing new to Dawes. He started 18 months ago to organize the minute men of the constitution, an Illinois nonpolitical body, to see that opponents of constitutional government in either party were defeated at the polls. The first big battle came in the Cook county judicial election, November 6, 1923. Organized labor sought the defeat of Judge Denis E. Sullivan, democrat, and Judge Jesse Holdom, republican, because they had issued injunctions in labor cases. They were reelected.

"And that is not all," Dawes says. "The minute men are here to stay. They'll see that constitutional government is maintained wherever they are, and that means by legal means, not by wearing bed sheets."

His Views on Labor.

During his state campaign for the minute men he spoke to many assemblies in which organized labor members were prominent.

"They came to me, lots of them," says Dawes, "and told me that they were for constitutional government. 'We're labor men, and will continue to be so, but we're not for labor skates,' they said.

"I know what labor wants in this country. It wants a square deal," Dawes added. "The men do not think as their professional leaders think. My appeal is to the individual. The leaders are not the custodians of the men's consciences. We've got to have respect for law in this country—no slugging of men going peaceably on their way to their work. Honest labor men realize this, and they respect it."

"What's your philosophy in this campaign?" General Dawes was asked.

"Well, whether I win or am licked," he replied with a grin. "I'll have the satisfaction of knowing that I started a good fight and the American people will know that I've been in a scrap on the side of right. Americans love a fight, and they love the truth. They'll get both."

With a menu of attractions to tempt music-lovers of every class—the dilettante, the professional and the simple lover of the beautiful in all its manifestations—the sale of seats for the concerts of the Music club, both Civic Concert series and the Series Intime, opened on Friday last with a demand which proves once again the oft-repeated statement that each year sees Atlanta's appreciation of the finer things of life grow more universal.

The reservation of seats to subscribers began at 9 o'clock Friday morning, and from that hour to after 2 in the afternoon, Cable hall, where the sale is held, was thronged. At 2 o'clock, as had been previously announced, the sale was opened to the general public, for those who wished season tickets to the Civic Series alone.

The sale will be continued through October 3. Tickets are available for subscribing members, giving admission to all concerts in both series, as well as morning programs given at the Atlanta Woman's club, at the special price of $15. Those who wish to attend either of the series alone, however, may secure special season tickets for the one series and, at a later date, single seats for the opening concert also will be put on sale.

The Civic Concert series, to be given at the auditorium, will present Maria Jeritza, famous Metropolitan Opera company soprano, on October 18; John McCormack, Jascha Heifetz, Harold Bauer and Pablo Casals and the Cincinnati Symphony orchestra. Season seats for this series may be secured for $10.

The Series Intime, which is given at the Woman's club, includes concerts by Albert Spalding, Myra Hess and the Flonzaley Quartette and seats cost for this series, $5.

Single seats for the first concert, that of Madame Jeritza, will be placed on sale October 16, two days before her appearance, but orders for seats may be placed by mail now, to be filled in the order in which they are received when the sale is opened.

Wilmington Protests Building of Wharves For Fish Industries

Savannah, Ga., September 27.—(Special.)—Savannah would advertise her shrimp and fish and oyster and crab business, but a strong protest was filed with the county commissioners today against the proposal to erect fish and shrimp wharves by a sea food corporation at or near the Wilmington island bridge on the "million-dollar highway" to Tybee Island. The protest was founded on the grounds that the presence of such odoriferous business on a tourist highway would be a drawback to tourists.

CAROLINA COMPANY GETS SHIP CONTRACT

Washington, September 27.—The Carolina Company, of Charleston, was designated today by the shipping board to operate the consolidated service from south Atlantic ports to the United Kingdom and continental Europe. The service will be known as the American Palmetto Line.

Disposition of the south Atlantic consolidation wound up the program of the shipping board and emergency fleet corporation for combining services traversing the same ocean routes to increase economy and efficiency. Fourteen consolidations have been effected.

The board's action today eliminates as agents the concern of Trosdal, Plant & Lafonta and the Tampa Inter-Ocean company, leaving to the Carolina company the combined services which the three hve been handling out of Charleston, Savannah and Jacksonville. The three operated nine ships, but under the consolidation the Carolina company will have only seven.

SOUTHERN ILLINOIS STRUCK BY CRIME

sion made by Tate, the sheriff said. In her original confession, made in the jail at West Frankfort, Mrs. Tate placed all blame on Tate. In her final confession this afternoon she said in part:

"He (Tate) cried, he begged and pleaded with me until I honestly thought it was the right thing to do. I had been intimate with Robert Tate since about April or May. I thought a good deal of him, but I do not know. I have turned against him. Had it not been for him I would not have been in all this trouble."

TATE SAT WITH CORPSE OF MURDERED MINER.

Marion, Ill., September 27.—One of the most remarkable parts of Mrs. Tate's confession of the murder of her first husband, is that which describes the conduct of Tate and herself after Harrington died. She and Tate had much to do with the funeral preparations, and, as she says:

"Tate came and sat with the corpse with several members of my husband's church."

Harrington's body was hardly cold before Tate renewed his pleas that she marry him, Mrs. Tate said. A week after the funeral, Tate wanted her to go to West Frankfort, a mining town near here, and get married. In another week they were married.

On Friday, Mrs. Tate returned to Johnston City to inquire whether her mother had received the miner's union death benefit for Harrington. She decided to visit her husband's grave, and when she reached the cemetery, she was astonished to see a gang of men at work exhuming her first husband's body. She was arrested soon afterward.

Both Tate and his wife were rushed to jail here shortly after their arrest. Feeling has been running high in this section over the Hight-Sweetin case and lately, when persons familiar with the suspicions circulated about Harrington's death, commenced to discuss them freely, there was much talk of what should be done to Tate and his wife, if an examination disclosed that Harrington had been poisoned.

Sixteen national guardsmen, detailed here for duty during the trials growing out of the recent fight between the Ku Klux Klansmen and their opponents, patrol the building in which Tate and his wife are incarcerated.

BEHEADED HUBBY AND KILLED SELF, IS TALE OF NOTE

New Bedford, Mass., September 27. "My husband's body is under the floor. Mine will be found in the river."

This note, signed "Mary," and found under a door, led to the discovery of Joseph Jusdowski's body under a trap door in the rear of his combination grocery store and home here.

The head had been severed from the body.

Jusdowski's wife, Mary, has been missing for a week. Police doubt that she committed suicide by drowning in the Acushnet river as it is reasoned that if she had, her body would have appeared in the stream before now.

The Jusdowskis had quarreled frequently, neighbors told the police.

CHANCE FOR IMPROVEMENT OF MRS. SWEETEN GOOD.

Salem, Ill., September 27.—Chances for the improvement of the physical condition of Mrs. Elsie Sweeten, held in jail on a charge of having poisoned her husband, Wilford Sweeten, were considered good today with her abandonment of a fast last night, when she ate her first solid food since Tuesday. A glass and one-half of milk was all that she has taken since she has been arrested.

Joy permeated her mind today, for tomorrow she was to have with her her three boys whose future has been her greatest cause of worry.

"My life was as pure as these flowers until I met that man Hight," Mrs. Sweeten exclaimed when Sheriff Vogt brought her a bouquet presented by a Salem woman.

Lawrence M. Hight, of Ina, no longer bears the prefix reverend, for he has been deprived of that title in a committee meeting of the southern Illinois conference of the Methodist Episcopal church, which was ready today to report to the conference. The action came after a church trial on a charge of murder, preferred in connection with the poisoning of his wife and Sweeten.

THIRD MINISTER STRIPPED OF FROCK.

Carbondale, Ill., September 27.—The third minister to have been expelled from the ministry of the Methodist Episcopal church during the annual meeting of the Southern Illinois conference, in session here, was stripped of his frock today.

The Rev. J. O. Richardson, of Thompsonville, Ill., was expelled from the church today when the conference found him guilty of conduct unbecoming a minister.

His name came up with those of two others, Lawrence M. Hight, of Ina, Ill., confessed poisoner of his wife, and C. M. Latimer, of Fairfield, Ill., the latter on a charge of conduct unbecoming a minister, who were ordered expelled from the church by the unanimous vote of the conference.

The conference found the Reverend Richardson's name linked with that of a young girl of his congregation after an alleged embracing scene in the Thompsonville church.

BANK PRESIDENT ROUTS BANDITS.

Kincaid, Ill., September 27.—President Bruce Shaw, of the Kincaid Trust and Savings bank, this morning drove four bank robbers away from his bank with a revolver. They escaped empty-handed. President Shaw suffered a gunshot wound in his hand.

One tall, blonde robber led the band of four men, President Shaw reported. He forced Shaw into the vault, but failed to secure the vault door, whereupon Shaw slipped out while the robber was occupied looking for loot, and started firing at him. The robber ran, returning the fire. The bank president was struck in one hand.

The men entered tht bank and one choked Mrs. Maude Quinn, cashier, while the other drove Shaw into the vault. Approximately $90,000 in pay roll money was in the vault, President Shaw said, and was missed by the robbers because it had not yet been brought from the vault.

When Shaw started shooting a large touring car containing four men drove up in front of the bank and an adjoining drug store and poured a fusillade of bullets at the two buildings while the men inside the bank made their escape. Ira Aull, an employee of the bank, was forced into the car, but a satchel containing about $2,000, which the robbers had obtained, was dropped on the sidewalk in the scuffle. Aull was released a mile and a half from town suffering from a bullet wound in the leg and a cut in his scalp. Mrs. Maudt Quinn, who was choked, was not seriously injured.

BANK CLOSE EARLY TO CHECK ROBBERS.

Mendota, Ill., September 27.—Beginning Wednesday, Mendota banks will close between 12 noon and 1:15 p. m. as a precaution against daylight bank robberies.

REFUSES EXTRADITION OF ALLEGED MOB LEADER.

Cairo, Ill., September 27.—Extradition of Roy Ogden, of Ballard county, Kentucky, one of the men indicted in Mound City, Ill., as alleged leaders of a mob which threatened the jail in that city, following the murder of Daisy Wilson, 18-year-old Villa Ridge (Ill.) storekeepers' daughter last July, has been refused by Governor Fields of Kentucky, it was learned here today. Hess Conners, a Cairo negro, found guilty of the murder of Miss Wilson, is to hang October 17.

Ogden contended in a petition signed by several hundred Ballard county residents that he would not receive a fair trial in the Puliski county (Ill.), circuit court, declaring that the jury would be packed with negroes, who, he said, would be prejudiced against him.

Ogden is charged with being one of the principal agitators in the mob that besieged the Pulaski county jail, threatened guards and demanded that two negroes held as suspects in connection with the murder, be turned over to them. The trials of the other eight alleged mob leaders are set for the October term of court.

PRESS IS ASKED TO PRINT LESS CRIME.

Murphysboro, Ill., September 27.—A resolution calling on the press to give less attention to crime in southern Illinois and to devote more space to constructive news was passed here last night at a meeting of the retail merchants' bureau of the chamber of commerce. The resolution also asks that the public cooperate with the news agencies in gathering constructive news from southern Illinois.

The resolution will be sent to all civic organizations in southern Illinois, labor unions and religious societies. It declares that "all southern Illinois suffers under news accounts through the press in which unnecessary details of crimes committed in certain communities and by certain organized factions are given," and that such "publicity reflects unduly upon the integrity of the vast majority of the law-abiding people of the state."

Roosevelt May Speak At Pan-American Meeting

Franklin D. Roosevelt, prominent New York democratic leader, who was a vice presidential candidate in 1920, probably will speak at the Pan-American commercial congress, which opens here Wednesday, it was stated Saturday by Dr. C. J. Owens, in general supervision of organization work.

A telegram was received Saturday from Clem Shaver, chairman of the national democratic committee, stating that Mr. Roosevelt, who already has left New York City to spend a long vacation in Georgia, has tentatively agreed to deliver an address at the congress.

Complete arrangements for the trade meeting also were announced during the day, giving details of the elaborate entertainment to be provided for the distinguished delegates and diplomats who will be in attendance, and also a full list of prominent nationally-known speakers.

Registration will be inaugurated Tuesday on the mezzanine floor of the Ansley hotel, headquarters for the congress. Many foreign delegates are expected here Monday, and practically all will be in Atlanta by Tuesday night.

Meet Opens Wednesday.

The opening session of the meeting will be held at the Ansley at 10:30 o'clock Wednesday morning, with Dr. Owens presiding. Dr. Carter Helm Jones, prominent Atlanta minister, will offer the opening prayer. Addresses of welcome will be made by Mayor Walter A. Sims on behalf of the city; Governor Clifford Walker for the state; Congressman W. D. Upshaw for the fifth congressional district, and Assistant Attorney General T. R. Gress, who will deliver his address in Spanish, on behalf of the Atlanta general committee.

The celebration of a decade of successful operation of the Panama canal will be held Wednesday morning, with General George W. Goethals, builder of the canal, making the principal address. William A. Reid, foreign trade adviser of the Pan-American union, will make a response to one of the principal addresses of the morning session.

Primary questions of banking, finance and exchange problems between this country and Latin-American nations will be considered at the Wednesday afternoon meeting. The introductory address will be delivered by M. B. Wellborn, governor of the federal reserve bank of the fifth district, with a response by A. H. Mr. Baldwin was the first trade commissioner of the United States appointed after the foreign commercial service was established by law.

Talks also will be made by Frank O. Wetmore, of the First National bank, of Chicago; W. F. Gephart, of the First National bank, of St. Louis, and Joseph A. McCord, chairman of the board of the federal reserve bank of the sixth district.

The annual banquet will be held on the Ansley roof garden at 7 o'clock on the opening night of the congress, and will be tendered in tribute to diplomatic and consular representatives of Latin-American countries in attendance. The toast will be given by Clark M. Eichelberger, of New York, with responses by foremost diplomatic officials, who will be guests of honor.

Big Consular Conference.

The second biennial international consular conference will be held Thursday morning, and will be participated in by consuls general, consuls, vice consuls, honorary consuls, and consular agents of foreign countries accredited to the United States. The first international conference was held in conjunction with the Southern Commercial congress in 1922, and at that time it was decided to hold meetings every two years.

The afternoon session, to convene at 3 o'clock on the Ansley roof, will be devoted to consideration of transportation in its relation to foreign trade. The divisions of this section include highways, railways and waterways, and will be participated in by representatives of the United States shipping board, various shipping lines, highway and automobile associations, general freight and passenger agents of practically all railroads traversing the south, and representatives of the United States air service.

McKellar, foreign trade manager of the Southern railroad; Colonel Benehan Cameron, president of the Bankhead Highway association; S. Guyt McLendon, secretary of state of Georgia, and Harry Hartwell, Mobile commissioner.

The evening meeting will include addresses and formal reports by official spokesmen representing all of the 20 Latin-American nations which are members of the Pan-American union.

A formal session will be held Friday morning, at which consideration of general Pan-American questions will be taken up, including educational, social and humanitarian subjects. Among noted speakers will be Surgeon General H. S. Cumming, of the United States health department; Dr. Franklin Martin, head of the American College of Surgeons, of Chicago; Dr. John G. Harrison, professor of philosophy at Mercer university, and Dr. Glenn Levin Swiggett, head of the division of foreign trade education of the United States department of the interior.

During the afternoon, delegates and other visitors will be taken on an inspection tour of principal industrial institutions in and near he city. Inspection will be made under direction of the Georgia Manufacturers' association, with John W. Yopp as director, and N. Dominguez, of the foreign department of the Ford Motor company, as official interpreter.

Brilliant Social Event.

A brilliant social event will be tendered Friday night at the Piedmont Driving club, arrangements having been made by the reception and entertainment committee, under chairmanship of Colonel William Lawson Peel. The committee includes leaders in Atlanta's social and business world, as well as a group of high army officials, of which Major General Shanks is chairman. The function will be complimentary to the Latin-American visitors.

The opening session of Saturday, the final day of the congress, will be devoted to agricultural economics. The introductory address will be delivered by Dr. A. M. Soule, president of the Georgia State College of Agriculture, and addresses also will be delivered by M. V. Calvin, of the Georgia state department of agriculture, and Colonel Harvie Jordan, managing editor of the American Cotton association and a member of the United States commission on rural credits.

The closing session will start at 3 o'clock Friday afternoon, and the meeting will be given over to consideration of foreign commerce as to exports, imports, trade balances, barriers, and opportunities. An additional feature will be demonstrations showing Georgia's part in the world's trade.

Plan Round Table Talks.

Addresses will be delivered by H. M. Stanley, commissioner of commerce of Georgia; Charles D. Roundtree, president of the Georgia Press association, and B. C. Getsinger, director of the southeastern division of the bureau of foreign and domestic commerce of the United States department of commerce. Brief responses will be made by representatives of all ports and commercial capitals of the state.

Round table discussions on commercial and foreign trade topics will be held throughout the week, and at the close of each formal session, an open forum will be conducted, at which delegates will be given opportunities to discuss all subjects and offer resolutions.

The United States department of commerce has detailed officials of that department to attend the convention to hold consultations with delegates interested in the foreign and domestic commerce division of the department.

Alleged Slayers Of City Marshal To Face Court

Ludowici, Ga., September 27.—The trials of C. A. Sallette and Ross Hodges, jointly indicted with D. P. Sallette for the death of J. M. McDaniel, marshal of the town of Ludowici, on the night of January 26, will begin Monday, at an adjourned term of Liberty county superior court at Hinesville.

D. P. Sallette was tried at Ludowici, during the September term of Long county superior court, when a verdict of manslaughter was returned, which carried with it a sentence of five to 10 years.

He is now out under bond pending decision on appeal for a new trial. The state will attempt to show that D. P. Sallette inflicted a wound on the head of the marshal with some blunt instrument after McDaniel had been shot twice in the arm.

Funds Are Needed For Approaches At Girls' School

Ways and means of providing funds to complete necessary grading and to build approaches for the new Girls' High school building will be taken up this week at a meeting of a committee composed of City Comptroller B. Graham West, Chief of Construction W. A. Hansell, John T. Hancock, president of the board of education, and a special committee of council. Members of the councilmanic committee are Councilmen C. C. Aven, of the Third ward; T. Frank Calloway, of the Tenth ward, and Lee Sudderth, of the Eleventh.

One plan which will be proposed will include turning Hansell and Killian streets, both of which abut on school property, into driveways, setting aside of Rosalia street for pedestrians by prohibiting any vehicular traffic. According to the proposed plan, Hansell and Killian streets would form a circular drive completely around the building, and barring of traffic from Rosalia street would be a big step toward safeguarding lives of students at the school.

It is probable the county will be asked to share the expense of grading and building of approaches, members of the committee stated Saturday. The plan decided on will be presented to council at its next meeting, October 6.

The quartet were taken into custody by Officers H. H. King, M. B. Johnson and M. D. Cartwright.

Wilkerson was bound over under $1,000 bond on a charge of burglary, and the other three are being held on charges of receiving stolen goods.

PACKERS REQUIRED TO FURNISH BONDS

Washington, September 27.—The big packers, as well as traders and other dealers, were called upon today by Secretary Wallace to furnish bonds, covering their business transactions at all public stock yard markets.

Heretofore, only commission men have been required to file bonds, but under the authority of the last agricultural appropriation act, Secretary Wallace has issued an amendment to the regulations under the packers and stockyards' act requiring that traders, packer-buyers and other dealers be bonded. The bonds will range from $1,000 to $50,000 according to the volume of business handled, plus 10 per cent of the amount of the business over $50,000.

REBELS SURROUNDED BY FEDERAL FORCES

San Salvador, Republic of Salvador, September 27.—Honduran government forces have surrounded Comayagua, with a view to overcoming the troops of the rebel leader, Ferrera, who captured the town last Monday, according to government advices from Tegucigalpa.

Rebel reports say that when General Ferrera entered Comayagua, he put to rout 2,800 guards and captured three cannon, six machine guns, 500 rifles and much ammunition. The rebels claim occupation of LaPaz and Santa Barbara and rout of the government forces commander by Generals Diaz, Zelaya and Perez at Siguatepeque.

Cornelia To Boost Coolidge.

Cornelia, Ga., September 27.—(Special.)—A drive for new members of the recently organized Coolidge-Republican club, of Cornelia, will be begun in Banks, Stephens and Habersham counties in the near future, it was announced tonight by R. C. Moss, of Banks county, president. The club is expected to be active in the interest of the republican ticket in the national election, officers declared.

Arthur Burrell is vice president and F. D. Presley is secretary and treasurer of the new organization.

STEELE QUITS JOB AS REFORM HEAD

Philadelphia, September 27.—Joseph M. Steele, president of the law enforcement league of Philadelphia, today resigned as head of that organization as a result of the telegram sent to President Coolidge by the secretary of the league in which he said he possessed evidence of corruption among federal office holders in Pennsylvania.

"I was amazed that you should have sent such an unwise communication in voting not only yourself but those associated with you in very unfavorable notoriety and controversy," Steele said in his letter of resignation to William R. Nicholson, Jr., the secretary.

"I am convinced," he added, "that nothing can be gained by the use of threats and particularly upon the chief executive of the United States in whose integrity I have the utmost confidence.

Not in Sympathy.

"I have not been in full sympathy and accord for some time past with some of the methods used by the league in the promotion of its plans for securing law enforcement and have so expressed myself to you."

Nicholson's telegram threatened to make public the alleged evidence he had if General Butler were removed by Mayor Kendrick as director of public safety. The telegram said the president "alone can save Philadelphia from further disgrace and humiliation," and asked him if he would "act to avert this calamity."

When Steele's resignation became known, Nicholson said that an effort would be made to have General Butler take the presidency of the league in the event he is dismissed from the police department.

Mrs. Willebrandt's Letter.

It was said here that the basis of Nicholson's telegram to the president was a letter written to the league by Mrs. Mabel Walker Willebrandt, United States deputy attorney general, regarding prohibition enforcement. Mrs. Willebrandt was in Philadelphia today on her way to Doylestown, Pa., to attend a republican gathering. She said she recalled a letter written to the league in which she made no specific reference to corruption or to any person. She added that she often had stated that the trouble with prohibition enforcement was political strangulation and she may have said something to that effect in the letter. She had no apologies to make, she said, and would not engage in any general "sniping."

Nicholson said that through some error, the word "corruption" was used in his telegram instead of "strangulation." If summoned to Washington, he added, the league would lay before the attorney general the record of three years in prohibition enforcement in Philadelphia.

Members of the committee include Asa J. Patterson, chairman; Frank Adair, H. B. Judkins, Major Colly, of the United States army, Mrs. Stacy Hill, and others.

The aviators will fly over the course charted for the Schneider cup race which recently was cancelled.

STATE HEALTH BOARD PUBLISHES BABY BOOK

An educational booklet, recently published by the Georgia State Board of Health, for the information of expectant mothers, dealing with the care of the child from infancy to its fourth birthday, and presenting solutions and hygienic problems, is now available at the offices of the board in the state capitol. A copy may be obtained upon request to the department.

The booklet, which has been called "The Georgia Baby Book," is complete in every detail. It has been prepared with an expert knowledge of baby care and the information is valuable in safeguarding the child through the critical period of its life.

The Georgia State Board stimulates and supervises the work of local health departments and health officers, with a view to increased efficiency. Outside financial aid is frequently negotiated to enable counties to maintain full-time health departments.

A trained and experienced health nurse is employed by the department to supervise all nurses who are under the direction of the board, and to cooperate with other public health nurses in the state. A laboratory is maintained for the free diagnosis of contagious diseases. Any person caring to avail himself of the service of the board, which is almost unlimited in health matters, should address the Georgia State Board of Health, 131 Capitol Square, Atlanta, Ga.

METHODISTS PLAN FULL OBSERVANCE CHILDREN'S WEEK

Methodists Sunday schools throughout the state are planning for the annual observance of children's week, October 19-26. A continent-wide campaign for the observance of children's week was launched four years ago by social and religious agencies for the purpose of bringing to the attention of the adult the possibilities and paramount needs of childhood.

The program has three features: Home, visitation, parents' meeting, and a forward step.

The campaign in the North Georgia conference is being promoted by Miss Corinne Little, of Atlanta, elementary superintendent of Sunday school work, assisted by the following district superintendents: Mrs. J. L. Massey, Hartwell; Mrs. J. J. Prater, Athens; Miss Johnnie Gaissert, Sparta; Mrs. J. D. Hemming, Atlanta; Mrs. E. C. Houston, Atlanta; Mrs. J. W. L. Brown, Cartersville; Mrs. Sam Dawson, Woodstock; Mrs. Myrick Clements, Bullochville; Miss Ione Ellis, Monticello.

According to Miss Little, unusual interest is being manifested in children's week observance this year, more than a hundred schools in the North Georgia conference alone having already indicated their intention of observing the week. Information concerning the week can be had by addressing the Methodist Sunday school board, 407 Wesley Memorial building, Atlanta.

Builds Modern Noah's Ark.

A modern Noah's Ark has just been launched in the Mud Islands near Baltimore, Md. The odd craft is 50 feet long, 12 feet wide, 12 feet high, and contains six rooms, says Popular Science Monthly for October. The "ark" is to be modernized by the addition of two gasoline motors and electric lights, after which the builder, Allan Risley, and his family will go cruising.

An Electric Nail Polisher.

The latest scientific contrivance for assisting milady in making a perfect toilet comes from France in the form of an electric nail polisher, says Popular Science Monthly for October. $1,400,000 Deal In Local Property Sets High Record

Candler, Incorporated, Purchases Half Block in Biggest Single Deal in City's History.

DEVELOPMENT PLANS CAUSE SPECULATION

Rumor Current That Out-of-Town Firm Plans Erection of Mercantile Establishment.

BY PAUL JONES.

The sale of a half block of valuable down-town real estate, bounded by Peachtree, Harris and Spring streets, to Asa G. Candler, Incorporated, was announced Saturday afternoon by J. H. Ewing, of the J. H. Ewing & Sons, realty company. The sum of $1,400,000 paid for this property is said to constitute the largest single real estate transaction ever made in this city.

While no definite announcement could be secured from the purchasers of this valuable central property, it is understood that an immense department store will be erected on the property. Many rumors have been heard with reference to the development of this property, one of which is to the effect that an out-of-town mercantile company will occupy the property and that arrangements will be made for the erection of a building within a short tine.

Nothing could be learned, however, with reference to this matter, Asa G. Candler, who represented the purchasers in the transaction refusing to make a statement regarding the possible development of the parcel. It has been rumored for several days that an out-of-town mercantile establishment has been negotiating with Asa G. Candler, Incorporated, with a view toward the erection on the corporation's property of a large store, eclipsing even that of the M. Rich & Brothers company in both cost and size. The plans for this building, it has been stated, have passed the reuclus stage, but nothing could be learned regarding the matter from those connected with the local transaction.

Big Building Removed.

It is known however that the Candler interests, owning a valuable lot of property in the down-town section, have developed some of their most valuable holdings for clients on the plan adopted in the erection of the handsome seven-story building of the George Muse Clothing company. Being in the real estate business for the purpose of realizing profits on their investments, it is also known that the Candler interests do not do things on a small scale, therefore, much credence has been placed by real estate and business men upon rumors current with reference to the proposed building by an out-of-town organization.

The big parcel of property extends

U. S. WORLD FLIERS WITHIN TWO HOURS OF JOURNEY'S END

Circle of Globe To Be Complete Officially When Aviators Land in Seattle Today.

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.

Eugene, Ore., September 27.—America's round-the-world aviators tonight were within a two-hour flight of the official end of their long journey.

They flew here from Crissy field, San Francisco, in a little more than five hours today and expect to complete the circumaviation of the globe in Seattle at noon tomorrow. If weather conditions are favorable, they plan to take off from here at 10 a. m.

Lieutenant Lowell H. Smith, commander of the flight, who was the first to leave Crissy field, from where he took off at 9 a. m., also was the first to land here, his plane coming down at 2:17:35 p. m. The other two pilots, Lieutenants Leigh Wade and Erik Nelson, followed within three minutes.

They were welcomed by Governor Pierce, Mayor Parks of Eugene, army officers and a reception committee.

MAJOR MARTIN WAITS TO WELCOME COMRADES.

Seattle, Wash., September 27.—When the American army aviators arrive here tomorrow, officially completing their first flight around the world, they will find awaiting them a reception which will be in keeping with their historic achievement.

In addition to the 40,000 or more spectators expected to be on hand to acclaim the triumphant return of the globe-circling officers, there will be representatives of the civil and military governments of the United States and Canada present to extend formal greetings and congratulations.

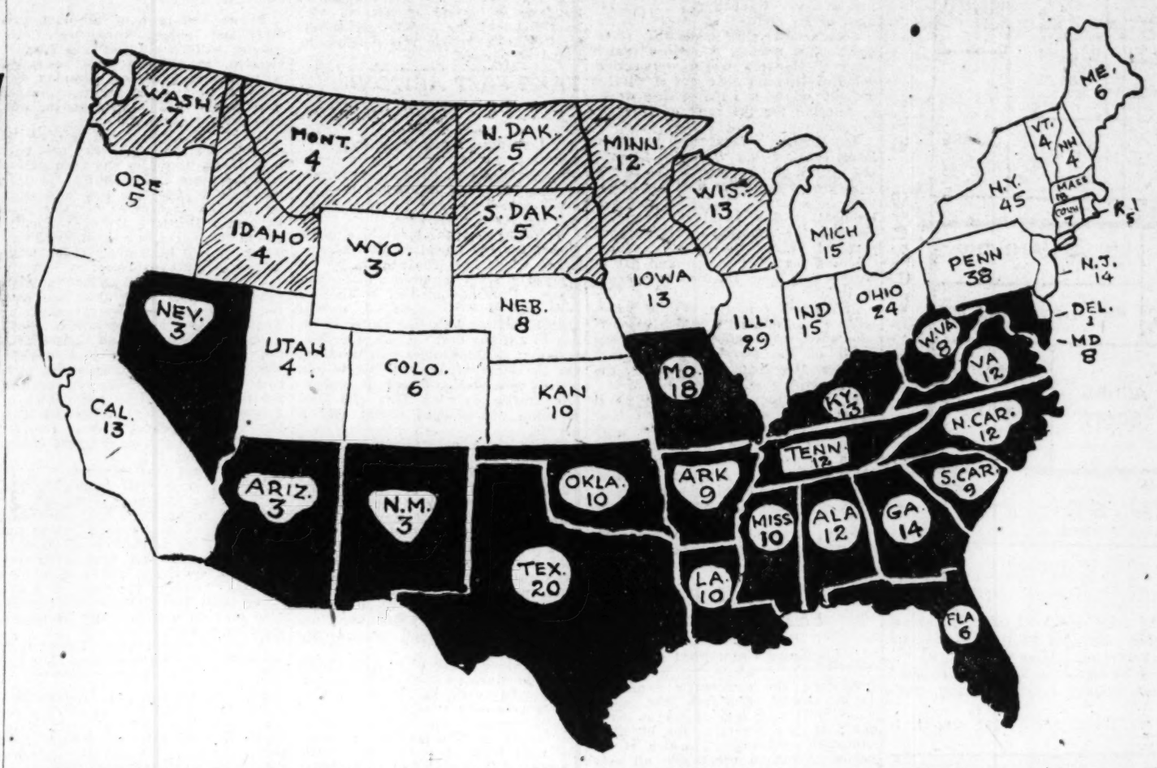

Major General Charles G. Morton, commanding the ninth corps area, will represent President Coolidge and Secretary Weeks, and Rear Admiral J. A. Hoogewerff will represent the navy department. Canada has sent two representatives as well as the destroyer Patrician to welcome the fliers.

Upon arrival at the Sand Point aviation field the fliers will be officially greeted and then escorted to Volunteer park, the center of the city, where the civic reception will be held. It is here that gifts raised by public subscription will be presented. After the reception the fliers will be taken to a hotel.

On Monday the airmen will be guests at a luncheon and it is planned to have them unveil a shaft commemorating the beginning and ending of the famous flight.

Among those who will welcome back the fliers is Major Frederick L. Martin, who started on the flight as commander, but who was forced to return when his plane was wrecked in Alaska.

How the Election Can Be Thrown Into Congress

In the map above the states in black are the ones which it assumed Davis can carry. The states striped are the ones it is assumed La Follette may carry. The states in white are the ones it is assumed Coolidge can carry. If Davis and La Follette can carry all the states credited to them in this map; and if, in addition, Davis can take away from Coolidge one large state like New York or Ohio or two smaller states like Indiana and New Jersey or any other combination making up twenty-three electoral votes or if Davis and La Follette between them do so—in any of these events Coolidge would fail to win a majority in November and the election would be thrown into congress.

BY MARK SULLIVAN.

Washington, D. C., September 27.—The campaign is now at a stage expressed by two questions:

First, can Coolidge be elected at the popular election in November?

Second, if Coolidge is not elected in November, what then happens?

That this is the present stage of the campaign is stated, both directly and by implication, on the authority of all three party organizations. The republicans say that their fight is to prevent the election from going into congress, which is the same as saying their fight is to win at the popular election in November. The democrats say that Davis will be the next president of the United States in either of two events; either by winning the popular election in November; or, failing that, by the action of congress. The La Follette party leaders have as their purpose the carrying of a maximum number of states, and inasmuch as practically every state that La Follette can carry is a normally republican state, it follows that any fair degree of success attending La Follette's efforts will result in Coolidge's failing to win the popular election in November.

Because this is the situation as it lies, and also for simplicity's sake, let us begin by comparing how many states Davis must carry and how many La Follette must carry in order to prevent Coolidge from winning in November. Let us consider this, and the likelihood of their carrying them.

Begin by conceding to Davis the states Cox carried in 1920. That was the Democratic minimum for all time. That Davis will carry every one of these states no impartial person disputes. The republicans sometimes claim they can carry Kentucky this year. But the fact is, neither Ken-

HIGH GAS PRICES BLAMED ON RATES

Alleged Excessive Freight Rates Given as Reason for Failure To Cut Prices Here.

Attention was called Saturday to alleged excessive freight rates on gasoline from New Orleans to Atlanta, as compared with similar rates on this commodity from New Orleans to Louisville, Ky.; Nashville, Tenn., and Chattanooga, Tenn., in a communication sent out by Harry T. Moore, secretary and traffic manager of the Atlanta freight bureau.

The information contained in his communication, he said, had been gathered from reports of a number of members of the freight bureau, who stated freight costs were blamed for Atlanta's being left out of gasoline price cuts.

From New Orleans to Atlanta, a distance of 492 miles, the rate is 42 1-2 cents per hundred pounds, according to Mr. Moore, while the rate to Louisville, a haul of 747 miles, is 34 cents. The rate is the same to Nashville, for a haul of 560 miles, and the same to Chattanooga, a haul of 496 miles. He said he had urged carriers, at a recent conference, to place Atlanta on a parity with these points.

The difference in Atlanta rate and the Louisville, Nashville or Chattanooga rate is 7 1-2 cents per hundred pounds, according to Mr. Moore. On 8,500 gallons, average loading, it is the equivalent of $42 a car, or $130,000 per annum that Atlanta consumers pay as a tribute in excessive rates over other points on gasoline.

Pioneer Woman Succumbs After Brief Illness

Mrs. Georgia Harrison Starke Dies Saturday Following Apoplectic Stroke.

Mrs. Georgia Harrison Starke, member of one of the south's oldest families, widow of the late Colonel A. W. Starke, and daughter of the late George W. Harrison, who served as secretary of state of Georgia before the Civil war, died Saturday morning in her 89th year.

Her death marks the passing of a pioneer citizen of Atlanta and the south. Her useful life in affairs of civic interest as well as affairs of church won for her the admiration and love of all who knew her.

Mrs. Starke was mentally alert and physically active to the time of her death, which followed an apoplectic stroke Wednesday morning at the home of her sister, Mrs. Nora Harrison Clarke, at 2727 Peachtree road. She was a devoted member of the First Baptist church.

Her husband, Colonel Starke, died more than 50 years ago in Troy, Ala., where he had refugeed because of the yellow fever epidemic which then gripped Montgomery, Ala. He was a member of an old and prominent Richmond family, being a brother of Colonel Lucian Starke, Judge Bolling Starke and Walter Starke, of Virginia. At the time of his death he held a seat in the state legislature of Alabama.

Following the death of her husband,

Pretty Miss Held After Wild Chase InRum-LadenCar

Freddie Beasley, 17, Leads Officers in Exciting 3-Mile Dash.

Was it the spirit of youthful abandon and sheer delight of leading officers a three-mile chase over winding roads, byways and streets, or was it with the purpose of the professional liquor-runner, that led pretty Freddie Beasley, 17, of Piedmont avenue, to race with county officers Saturday afternoon until she was overtaken and five gallons of corn whiskey found in her automobile.

The pretty miss would have us believe one thing, while officers hold to the latter solution.

Miss Beasley, who succeeded in making a $500 bond late Saturday night on a charge of violating the prohibition law, says she experienced a wonderful thrill in the chase with County Officers Dickerson and Vinson, from Howell station to Walton street, where she was apprehended. She even went so far as to say that if she had been real sure the pursuers were officers of the law she would never have allowed them to overtake her.

"I conceived the idea of hauling the whiskey Saturday morning," Miss Beasley is quoted as having said. "I went to my home and drove off in my father's car and procured the liquor, from where I don't know, nor do I remember the purchase price. I had no idea of carrying it to anyone and still less of drinking it myself. I was just merely hauling it around when the officers started on the chase."

Seated in the jail, calm, collected, and apparently contented, Miss Beasley was asked if that was her first experience in jail. "Yes," she answered bluntly, "and my last, too."

Officers, who first suspected that she had whiskey in the car when she sped off at their approach, are not exactly inclined to believe she was speeding "just for the excitement," but hold the opinion that she is a tool of an organized whiskey gang.

STING OF STINGAREE FATAL TO FISHERMAN

Moss Point, Miss., September 27.—Charles Stauter, 38, of this city died today from the effects of being stung by a stingaree while fishing. Poison set in and he lingered several hours.

Alleged Narcotic Peddler Trapped By Woman Decoy

Brunette Beauty, Marked Money, Factors in Returning Reeves to Durance.

Harry Reeves, alleged head of Atlanta's "dope" ring, is being held at police station without the privilege of making bond, following his arrest late Saturday night by federal and county officers. Reeves was arrested in his apartment at 137 Spring street as he was preparing to administer "dope" to three alleged addicts, according to officers.

Earlier in the night Reeves was arrested on a similar charge and made a $1,000 bond, a striking brunette woman trapping him. Within a few hours after his release under bond, officers who were shadowing him entered his apartment as he was preparing to "shoot" three persons, their report stated.

Officers declined to assess a bond Saturday night, stating that he will be held until tried early this week.

C. F. Bennett, 24, 559 Simpson street; E. Ruski, 34, 14 Williams street, and Miss Mary Smith, 35, of 112 Spring street, who were arrested in Reeves' apartment, are being held under city charges. Bonds have been assessed at $50 each.

Figured in Shooting.

Reeves figured in the shooting affray of one week ago at Forsyth and Marietta streets when an innocent bystander was dangerously wounded. Reeves, it is claimed, is the "brains" of the local dope ring and officers are determined to stop his illegal traffic in drugs, they asserted following his second arrest.

Scarcely had Reeves been released under bond on the charges made following the shooting incident, when federal and state officers, convinced that he would resume his alleged nefarious occupation, began to shadow him.

Their reports stated that characters of the underworld, both men and women, known to be "dope" addicts, resumed their visits to the Reeves' apartment on Spring street. However, the officers declared that their plans could not be entrusted to one of this class of purchasers. Either the plans would be betrayed to Reeves, the officers said, or the witness would "fall flat" when brought into court.

Use Woman Decoy.

Hence it was that Federal Narcotic Inspectors L. L. Marks and C. A. Whittington and City Detectives

TAKE FAST ACTION TO SAVE CATTLE

Government and State Cooperate To Check Foot and Mouth Disease in Texas County.

Houston, Texas, September 27.—With the definite diagnosis of the malady affecting 400 head of Brahma cattle on the ranch of Reverend William States Jacobs as the foot and mouth disease, plans were put into operation to hold the disease in check. Seventy-five men, guards, inspectors and laborers were put on the ranch and before night 6,000 acres of land and 1,100 head of beef cattle were under guard. This force was expected to be augmented by Monday.

The state livestock and sanitary commission issued an official quarantine today on all of Harris and Galveston counties and all that part of Fort Bend and Brazoria counties east of the Brazos river, prohibiting the movement of livestock either within these counties or out of them. Livestock already in transit on railroads was not affected by the order. The quarantine was extended to dressed carcasses and their hides or wool, as well as to all products of the soil, including hay, grain, biological products manufactured in the quarantined territory, trees, grass, shrubs, flowers and greenhouse plants.

Modified on Dairy Products.

The quarantine first was extended to dairy products, but was modified during the day to permit their shipment after they had been sterilized and placed in containers approved by an inspector attached to the commission.

Governor Neff was notified of the progress being made to check the disease. It was recognized that the

Lips of Imogene Sealed by Frank To Interviewers

Scribes Must Have Code Word From Tinney To Get Story From Her.

Southampton, England, September 27.—To interview Imogene Wilson now, a reporter must carry a secret talisman, a code word entrusted to him by Frank Tinney, the comedian, who apparently controls the thoughts which issue from Imogene's comparatively pretty lips.

Imogene, the New York actress famed along Broadway as Tinney's sparring partner in several bouts that dealt her severe pummelings at the hands of the black face artist, arrived here today, en route to London to join Frank, who is playing in the music halls. Tinney came to England recently after slipping out of New York on the liner Columbus. His wife had just sued him for a separation.

"Sure, I'm going to see Frank," Miss Wilson announced when she stepped down the gangplank. "But I cannot give you an interview unless you have the right code word. Frank told me that only those who came to me with the proper code word were to receive interviews."

Smothering their chagrin over lacking the combination to Imogene's sealed lips, those unfortunate correspondents watched Imogene hustle away under the guidance of a husky English private detective whom Tinney had appointed as a special guard for the ex-Follies girl. Immigration officials, showing an appalling lack of interest in Miss Wilson, allowed her to pass without questions.

Presidential Race Enters Last Stage; All Stumps Busy

DAWES CONTINUES TO HIT LA FOLLETTE ON CONSTITUTION

Independent Candidate Seeking To Throw Overboard Ship's Compass, Asserts G.O.P. Nominee.

Dawes Special, En Route to Chicago, Madison, Wis., September 27.—The La Follette independent candidacy was assailed in the home state of its presidential nominee today by Charles G. Dawes as a move to throw overboard the ship of state, "the compass—the constitution—and to commence to steer by the wind."

Such a move, the republican vice presidential nominee declared in a series of eight speeches in Wisconsin and three in Minnesota, would result "only in chaos."

Crows, ranging from several hundred in the smaller towns to several thousand in the cities, braved the cold, driving autumn rain to hear Mr. Dawes' condemnation of the La Follette movement and its platform declaration for congressional review of supreme court decisions.

Rain Falls All Day.

The rain greeted Mr. Dawes and his audience at the first stop of the day for his special train at Lake City, Minn., and continued with increasing intensity during the day and until this evening, when the nominee made his last address of his three-day Minnesota and Wisconsin tour at Bardwell, Wis. The waiting crowds were drenched and Mr. Dawes, refusing protection, oftentimes left the rear platform after a ten-minute speech with water-soaked clothes and water streaming from his face.

The crowd that greeted him at Madison was one of the smallest of the day. His attack on the La Follette movement followed along lines similar to his other speeches, but he did not at any time mention La Follette by name.

Again assailing inconsistency, Mr. Dawes in his address at Sparta said that "a lot of pee-wits" have been preaching "to me down there at the national committee to go out and speak this kind of a speech to this kind of people, or this kind to another kind, and all that sort of thing, and to straddle around with the rest of them."

Respects La Follette Courage.

And with that he threw up his hands and exclaimed: "Heavens alive," and then proceeded with his attack on the La Follette candidacy.

Several times in making this attack he paused to say that Senator La Follette "doesn't lack courage—I respect courage—he puts up a fight."

The nominee went back into ancient history for illustrations to drive home his point that governments, Campaign Managers Bring Up Reserve Array of Orators for Final Smash of Drive.

DEMOCRATIC BATTLE COVERS EVERY STATE

La Follette Forces To Send Out Crew of 600 "Wreckers" — Coolidge Aides Not So Numerous.

BY THOMAS L. STOKES.

Washington, September 27.—The presidential campaign will swing into its final stage next week, when the light field artillery of all three political movements will open fire in various parts of the country to second the rumbling of the major candidates. The rapid fire of campaign oratory will continue until election day.

The democrats are opening their final drive with an array of speakers who will pretty well cover the entire country, including several senators, three governors and other prominent leaders. The La Follette forces will pour around 600 campaign talkers over the length and breadth of the land, to re-echo the major drive of the Wisconsin senator himself.

G. O. P. Fire Not So Intense.

The republicans are not making such a spread as the others, but their artillery will be in action. Secretary of State Hughes and Secretary of Commerce Hoover will be among their second line defenders, as well as numerous others to be on hand at doubtful points.

Bringing the light artillery into play is the last act of the presidential drama. The country will be literally submerged with a campaign of hot talks between now and the first of November. It opens in a way an interesting portion of the campaign, for the second line of defense is not so cautious in its utterances as the big guns, and may be expected to furnish some interesting listening.

Mrs. La Follette on Stump.

There are some novelties in the final drive this year, too. For the first time in history, the wife of a presidential candidate will take the stump. Mrs. La Follette will make her initial speech for her husband at Mountain Lake Park, Md. This address is expected to be followed by others. It is no new stunt for Mrs. La Follette. She has spoken from too many platforms before to enumerate, in election appeals for her husband and on leading issues which he supported.

For the first time, the daughter of a presidential candidate will take a prominent part in her father's campaign, not as a speaker, but as a director of speaking and other activities. This is Mrs. Norman McMillin Adams, daughter of John W. Davis, who recently returned to the country. She will direct a victory drive from headquarters in New York.

Davis and La Follette will both take to the open road within the next

Constitution Elephant

:: BEAST IS LADEN WITH $2,510 IN CASH PRIZES ::

Brings Fall Night Cheer

Fall—gaudy herald proclaiming the advent with winter—is on us, bringing in his train rainy days and crisp nights.

After its long vacation, the fireplace has been cleared for action, and the ruddy blaze of coal or log fires warms the heart at the same time that it provides comfort for other portions of the anatomy more subject to the chill of late September.

Throughout the south, happy children frolic on the faded rug that fronts the "living room" chimney—and in many homes the the popping of corn and the aroma of peanuts in the process of roasting delight the ear and tease the palate.

And now comes The Atlanta Constitution to the rescue of the entire family, announcing new and engrossing mental entertainment for these long fall nights.

Meet the Elephant.

Ladi-e-s, gentlem-e-n and childr-e-n—all who scent the sport of keen competition from afar and hail with pleasant anticipation a new mathematical problem—

Attention!

Allow us to present to you—The Constitution elephant; a mathematical pachyderm bearing in his palanquin two great gifts for you.

The first, exhiliarating and interesting mental exercise which will improve your command over figures.

The second, a rich prize in cash of this fair realm.

Add 'Em Up.

The problem is to compute his weight—and this can be done by adding the hundreds of figures that compose the figure of the beast.

If the thrill of a contest appeals to you, consider the fact that the major prize is a cool one thousand dollars.

If the reverse is true, reflect that thirty rewards are offered as many winners.

If you're "jam up" on mathematics, consider yourself at liberty to "do your stuff" and demonstrate.

If "ciphering" stumps you, remember that only a simple process of addition is involved.

You're perfectly at liberty to employ any method you may choose in reaching your conclusion regarding the weight of The Constitution's famous elephant.

Remember the time 'way back yonder when mother stuck pins in the circles that composed the outline of an old-fashioned goose puzzle?

That's a little trick that might serve you well in this instance.

Or can you recollect the joys of the whole family in the days of kerosene lamps, when Mr. Webster's well-thumbed volume provided suggestions on words which might be evolved from the firm name, "Sharp & Flat," while everyone dreamed dreams of a brand-new upright piano as a reward for its investigations of the ramifications of the English language.

Start Task at Once.

The good old days—

Well, here they are back again; introduced in this issue of The Constitution; borne on the capable back of The Constitution's elephant.

Don't fail to look him up now. Raise the howl for all the pins in the house, and start the job of "adding 'em up" without delay.

Just as soon as your answer is ready, qualify it for one of the magnificent cash prizes offered by The Constitution.

And while you're "weighing the elephant" don't fail to rush in your suggestion for his name.

There are two big prizes for the winners of this feature of the game.

Tiny Grace of Toytown Asks $50,000 To Salve Her Heart

:: KIDDIES' HERO FIREMAN NAMED AS LOTHARIO ::

BY LYLE C. WILSON.

New York, September 27.—Down in the underground playroom of millions of New York kiddies, where dwarfs of the Hippodrome theater strut through life in a miniature world planned to match their miniature statures, Gracie Gould and Tommy Keenan don't speak any more.

Gracie and Tommy live in Toy Town, which is the name of the tiny village under the biggest theater in the world, and they have pleased most of the children in New York and many of the grown-ups with their antics. Gracie is 20 years old and during all that time she has grown to be just t[wo] feet six inches tall, which is quite tall enough to carry Gracie's 60 pounds to the proper advantage.

Tommy is the Toy Town fireman and like all men of action he is a heart-breaker. His blonde locks and blue eyes have charmed almost all the lady midgets in Toy Town and when Tommy first saw Gracie a year ago this month it was love at first sight, so the Toy Town gossips say.

Now Gracie has sued Tommy for $50,000 for breach of promise and it isn't any Toy Town suit, either, but a regular one drawn by a New York lawyer who probably never heard of Toy Town until his dimunitive client [ap]ear for her wounded heart.

From last September until May Tommy wooed her, Gracie says. As Toy Town fireman Tommy was a conspicuous figure in the life of the underground village and Gracie, who runs the Toy Town orangeade stand, was properly flattered at the attentions of so grand a figure who wore a bright red shirt every day and was likely to dash off to a fire and stage a thrilling rescue at any moment.

When May came around Tommy proposed and was accepted.

Tommy always came around to Gracie's orangeade stand to gulp down long drafts of yellow nectar after he put out fires. Tommy puts out a fire every night just to please the little boys and girls who crowd into Toy Town with their mothers and fathers between the acts of the show upstairs.

Always when Tommy and his red shirt appear at the nightly blaze there are youthful shouts of pleasure that would turn the head of almost any fireman and the applause began to affect Tommy Keenan. First he began to loaf around with the children, listening to them praise his dextrous manner with the flames and after they had gone back upstairs for the rest of the regular show Tommy, so Gracie says, started a philandering tour of Toy Town that took him past the booths and houses of some of the Toy Town flappers.

It was just one excuse after another with Tommy when Gracie asked him why he didn't come around after the fire and get his orangeade.

About a week ago Gracie got mad and they quarreled. Tommy became bitter. He said mean things about Gracie. He scoffed at her kisses. They did not please him. He would go elsewhere than to the orangeade stand after his fires and he wouldn't even excuse himself, either.

That finished it. Gracie went to her lawyer, Frederick E. Goldsmith, and he did the rest.

Tommy has been served with a summons in the case. He may answer within 20 days. If he doesn't, Gracie can file her complaint and she will do it, too. You can rely on Gracie.

Surprised and hurt, Tommy insists to all who will listen that he made no proposals of marriage and that his heart is his own and always has been.

Toy Town doesn't know what to think about it. The Toy Town women are for Tommy, with his good looks and red shirt, but the men aren't so sure about it. They whisper that Tommy has a real fire to quench this time and that there won't be any sideline cheers for his red shirt while he fights it.

FLYING TRIP IS MADE BY DAVIS TO CAPITAL

Washington, September 27.—Between campaign trips in West Virginia and Delaware, John W. Davis made a flying visit today to democratic headquarters here.

Besides conferring with party leaders and others, the democratic presidential nominee greeted several hundred newspaper correspondents at the National Free Press club and later attended a reception in his honor by a District of Columbia democratic club.

Speaking at the reception, Mr. Davis said he had an "abiding conviction" that the American people are responding to democracy's call and that the democrats could win if they had the will to win. He added that there were increasing evidences of such a will.

After eight hours in this city, the democratic standardbearer departed for Wilmington, where he had an engagement tonight to deliver his first address of the campaign in Delaware. From that city he will go to his personal headquarters in New York.

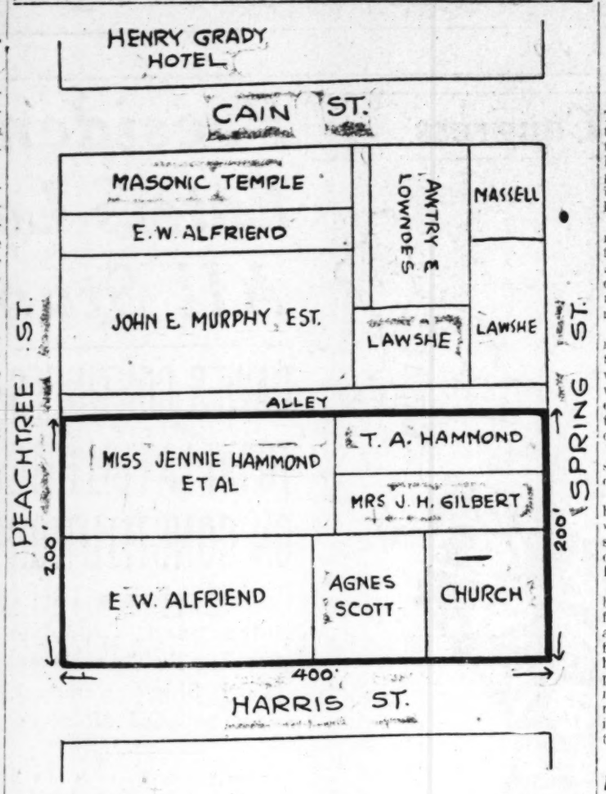

RHODE ISLAND, NEW JERSEY ADDED TO ENGAGEMENT.

Davis Special, En Route to Wilmington, Del., at Baltimore, September 27.—Before beginning his second westward swing early next month, John W. Davis will carry his fight for the presidency into two additional eastern states—Rhode Island and New Jersey—where he holds he has a better than even chance for victory in November.

Under present plans, Mr. Davis will speak at either Newark or Jersey City next Friday night and at Providence Saturday night. In his Thursday night speech at Madison Square garden Mr. Davis says he will talk largely along lines not yet touched upon. This rally will mark the opening of the second phase, as well as the beginning of the second month of his intensive campaigning.

Returning westward through upper New York state, Mr. Davis expects to deliver four addresses before moving into Ohio to speak at Cleveland and Toledo.

Plat of Property Involved

Plat above illustrates the location of a half block of valuable central property purchased by the Asa G. Candler, Inc., for $1,400,00 and said to be the biggest price ever paid for a parcel of Atlanta real estate.

The properties in the area bounded by the deep lines are involved in the Candler deal, which was transacted through Jones H. Ewing, well-known Atlanta real estate man.

The property, bounded by Peachtree, Harris and Spring streets, is directly opposite the Capital City Club.

something like 400 feet on Harris street, with 200 feet on Peachtree and a like frontage on Spring street. It stands directly opposite the magnificent Capital City club, and is within one block of the million-and-a-half-dollar Henry Grady hotel, which is now being completed at the corner of Peachtree and Cain streets.

It is without question one of the most valuable properties in so large a parcel held by any corporation or individual in the downtown section, and it goes without saying that a business concern of the importance of Asa G. Candler, Inc., would not invest nearly a million and a half dollars in real estate just to remain idle and produce nothing for its holders.

No Hint of Plans.

The purchase by Asa G. Candler, Inc., brings together in one parcel several highly desirable properties, according to the announcement of Jones H. Ewing, agent. Mr. Ewing's announcement carries no hint of the purposes of the Candler interests with reference to a possible development of the block.

"Asa G. Candler, Inc.," Mr. Ewing said, "has purchased through J. H. Ewing, of J. H. Ewing & Sons, one-half of central business property, bounded by Peachtree, Harris and Spring streets, for a consideration of $1,400,000. Asa G. Candler, Jr., representing the purchasers.

"This property covers an area of 80,000 square feet and includes the properties formerly owned by the following:

"Harris Street Presbyterian church, 100x90 feet.

"T. A. Hammond, 50x150 feet.

"Mrs. J. H. Gilbert, 50x150 feet.

"E. W. Alfriend, 100x220 feet.

"Miss Hammond, et al., 100x250 feet.

Agnes Scott college, 90x100 feet.

"This is one of the most valuable and best-located properties in the city and represents the largest real estate transaction ever consummated here.

"The purchase was made by the Candler interests strictly as an investment, showing conclusively their abiding faith in their own city.

"This gives a new impetus to the real estate market and will add great value to the north side property and to Atlanta real estate in general."

Own Other Property.

Candler interests, through its realty establishment, Asa G. Candler, Inc., is said to own many millions of dollars worth of the most valuable and productive realty in Atlanta. The purchase of various parcels by this group of Atlanta citizens and capitalists have formed some of the most thrilling and interesting of the many "real estate romances" of Atlanta.

Downtown Holdings.

Beginning at Five Points and running quite a distance through the downtown business section this group holds a number of highly valuable parcels, some of which have been improved with immense hotels, office buildings, commercial establishments and other structures. Very little of the property owned by the Candler interests, however, remains unimproved, and in several instances improvements placed upon their properties have reached into the millions, as in the case of the Candler building, the handsome Ansley hotel, the George Muse Clothing company store and other structures that are among the most important and costly in the south. They own properties on Peachtree, Broad and Forsyth streets also.

Aside from suburban holdings of the Candlers, which includes Druids Hills and other beautiful districts, this family group owns valuable property on the north side.

A notable instance in which the property purchased by the Candler interests came in for much publicity as a romance in real estate, was that of the purchase of the Clarke property at the corner of Edgewood avenue and Five Points, which was said to have been purchased half a century ago by the Clarke estate for $10,000 in Confederate money. This property is now said to be leased on a basis of 5 per cent rental on a valuation of $19,600 a front foot, a record value of southern city property. For this property the Candlers paid $420,000, and it is believed to be worth much in excess of that amount today.

The plan upon which the George Muse Clothing company store was erected, it has been explained, is known as the long-term lease, or ground rent plan, which has been in vogue in England for many years, where obstacles to property sales forced the renting of property for the purpose of making improvements where sales outright were impossible.

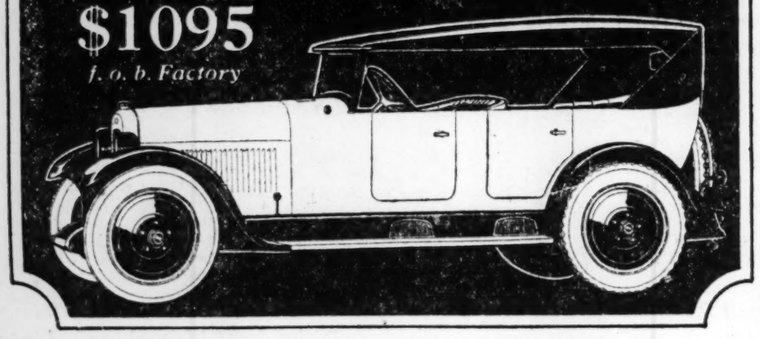

The million-dollar building erected by the George Muse Clothing company on the lot bounded on three sides by prominent down-town thoroughfares, Peachtree, Broad and Walton streets, was built under a 99-year lease, the company building the magnificent clothing establishment and paying rent thereon for the term, when the building will revert to owners of the ground.

This plan, it is pointed out, could be employed by the big department concern that it is said to be negotiating with Candler interests for the recently purchased property, as the long-term lease is said to be growing more and more in favor with big business each year.

M'KELLAR WILL FIGHT ROBISON'S PROMOTION

Memphis, Tenn., September 27.—Senator Kenneth D. McKellar, of Tennessee announced today that, in the event a nomination is sent to the senate to make Rear Admiral Robison, now holding that rank temporarily, a permanent rear admiral in the navy,—"I shall fight it to the limit of my ability."

Senator McKellar made this statement after reading a news dispatch from Washington which stated that Admiral Robison was one of several officers whom a naval board would recommend for the rank of rear admiral.

The Tennessee senator, in his statement, charged that "Mr. Robison was the officer of the navy in the cabal" with former Secretary Fall and others who, he asserted, "despoiled the government of the naval oil reserves' through the granting of leases and declared that the naval officer 'worked for it in season and out of season and later testified in defense of it."

"I cannot conceive of the possibility that the senate, which so overwhelmingly condemned these infamous steals of the navy's oil, will ever confirm Mr. Robison," Senator McKellar said.

"I am astounded that any naval board would recommend this officer for promotion," he added, "and more astounded that the president should for a moment consider recommending his promotion. Should the president propose, if re-elected, the reappointment of Denby as secretary of the navy and Fall as secretary of the interior, it would be but in line with this truly astounding proposal."

PRESIDENTIAL RACE ENTERS LAST STAGE

few days, the democratic candidate on his second trip into the west, which will take him as far as Kansas City. La Follette for his first campaign performance, which is expected to extend practically all over the country. President Coolidge will not get into the general movement, probably confining his speech-making to short trips in nearby points and speeches here.

All Candidates in Parleys.

With all three candidates, President Coolidge, John W. Davis and Senator La Follette, in Washington today, some final touches were put on the preparations for the wind-up of the campaign.

The president received political reports from several visitors and conferred with Senator Wadsworth at luncheon. Wadsworth reported on the situation in New York state, where Al Smith, running as a gubernatorial candidate for the fourth time, will make a determined effort to defeat Colonel Roosevelt and carry the state nationally for Davis.

After his return from West Virginia in the morning, until his departure for a speech at Wilmington, Del., at night, Davis conferred with Clem Shaver and other democratic leaders.

La Follette, in conference with his son, Robert, Jr., went over the plans for his trans-continental trip. "Young Bob" has just returned from a visit with mid-western managers of his father's campaign.

One of President Coolidge's callers, Gus J. Karger, Washington correspondent of The Cincinnati Times-Star, advised the president that a more intensive campaign west of the Mississippi was imperative if the republicans were to carry that section. Davis perfected plans for his swing through New England which begins next week. La Follette's itinerary will not be announced until Monday. His first important address will be in Chicago, from where he probably will travel northwest to the coast, swinging down through California.

whose action had been determined by a passing phase of popular opinion without steadying power, such as he said was provided by the American constitution and the courts had failed.

As Mr. Dawes concluded his Sparta speech, an elderly lady stepped forward from the crowd and said:

"General, you shouldn't smoke."

"Well, this is not an affectation; this is a bad habit, I know," Mr. Dawes replied, filling his pipe.

Praises Women's Activity.

"Let me tell you something about the women in this campaign," he continued, addressing the elderly lady and the women who at Sparta, as at other stops, made up from one-third to one-half of his audience.

"When I see their disinterestedness, the way they work when they are not running for office, when they are working for principle, it makes me blush for my sex. The women who are getting out and working in this campaign are working for something they believe is right and one of them is worth a dozen of these pee-wit politicians. Women are not out for votes—they are out for their country.

"Now, you will excuse me for smoking," and the old lady smiled as Mr. Dawes lighted up his pipe.

ALLEGED NARCOTIC PEDDLER TRAPPED

E. M. Cason and W. D. McGhee entered Spring street early Saturday afternoon bringing with them a young woman, stranger in Atlanta, who later gave her name in federal court as Mrs. Frances Hoffman, but failed to reveal her home address.

The four officers separated from the young woman soon after they reached Spring street. She then proceeded to the designated address where she was directed to "trade" with Reeves, and the officers remained under cover.

It was only a short time until Mrs. Hoffman emerged from the building. She signaled to the officers. A minute later the officers had entered Reeves' apartment, searched his person and the entire premises. They reported the recovery of a roll of marked money from Reeves and a heavy haul of morphine from various places where it had been secreted.

Delay Is Granted.

Reeves, nattily dressed and otherwise apparently prosperous, was brought before United States Commissioner James E. Brown. He sent an urgent call to Attorney W. Paul Carpenter and joined with his attorney later in pleading for a delay in preliminary hearing.

Commissioner Brown at first refused to delay hearing of the case. This brought an ultimatum from Attorney Carpenter in the form of a statement that he would not be a party to such a hurried trial. Commissioner Brown relented to the extent of setting trial for Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock. He ordered that Reeves be held in jail unless he could post bond of $1,000.

Many Indictments.

This, the latest narcotic episode in which Reeves has figured, brings his total number of similar cases pending in federal court up to nine. Four cases are lodged against him in state courts. These involve two cases of carrying concealed weapons, one of throwing cocaine into a woman's face and one charging a statutory offense.

An effort to arrest Reeves at Marietta and Forsyth streets last Saturday, after he is alleged to have sold a quantity of morphine to B. C. Lundergreen, a sailor who had acted as go-between for the officers, resulted in the accidental discharge of a revolver. F. M. Brown, an innocent bystander, was shot. He is recovering.

Reeves is said to have been named in the notorious bunco probe of several years ago. He was charged at the time, it is said by officers, with having knowledge of the operations of the gang which was headed by Floyd Woodward.

struggle would entail the expenditure of a large sum of money and the governor agreed to come to Houston tomorrow for a conference.

Trenches were dug today by a steam shovel for the burial of the infected cattle which are scheduled to be destroyed Monday, according to present plans. Probably one-half of the Jacobs herd will be sacrificed, it was stated. Poison bait was scattered today to kill any dog, wolf or other animal that might wander on the ranch. On the state highway to Galveston, guards were stationed and all automobile traffic between that city and Houston was stopped except over a detour.

While these precautions were being taken, Dr. Marion Imes was summoned from his home in California, which recently was the center of an infection. He will take charge of the bureau of animal industry forces in Texas during the fight on the disease.

Protect Fort Worth Market.

Plans to conserve the Fort Worth livestock market, the largest in the state, were made and included permission to ship cattle from outside the infected area if they were unloaded in daylight and properly inspected.

A third outbreak of disease among cattle in Harris county was diagnosed Saturday night by Dr. W. E. Cotton, government expert, as foot and mouth disease. The outbreak is on the ranch of Thomas Dunn, across the road from the Jacobs ranch, where the first infection was discovered. Dunn has about 1,500 cattle on his ranch. Preparations for shooting all of the infected cattle are under way.

WASHINGTON OFFERS ITS FULL COOPERATION.

Washington, September 27.—Prompt action by federal and state livestock officials has brought the combined forces of the bureau of animal industry and the livestock sanitary commission of Texas into a concentrated drive to eradicate an outbreak of the foot and mouth disease among cattle on a ranch in Harris county, Texas, not far from Houston. Dr. John R. Mohler, chief of the federal government's forces here, said conditions in general are favorable for eradication work.

The disease, which had been under observation of the state authorities, was not definitely diagnosed as the dreaded cattle scourge until today. Immediately a drastic quarantine was thrown around the infected ranch and those nearby, while a quarantine covering Harris and Galveston counties, was promptly put into effect as also were parts of Brazoria and Fort Bend counties.

Sign Contract Willingly.

The Texas officials willingly signed a contract for cooperation with the federal authorities, as is necessary before the federal government can begin operations within any state. Steam shovels worked all last night preparing a trench for the infected cattle when slaughtered. The usual methods of quarantine, inspection, appraisal, slaughter and deep burial, which have resulted in the suppression of other outbreaks, will be followed.

Direction of the federal forces in the work of eradication will be taken by Dr. Marion Imes, one of the bureau's veterinarians of long experience in foot and mouth disease control, who now is en route to Houston. Dr. L. J. Allen, inspector-in-charge of veterinary field work in Texas for the federal government, and Dr. T. W. Cole, his assistant, are working with Chairman J. Boog Scott, of the livestock sanitary commission of Texas, and Dr. Leon Cloud, state veterinarian, who are on the ground.

Came From South America.

Livestock authorities and sanitary officials of the various states have been notified by the department of agriculture of the prevalence of the disease in Texas.

The new outbreak is in no way connected with the infection which appeared in California last winter and which has been suppressed, officials of the bureau of animal industry stated today. Strong indications that the infection entered surreptitiously from South America through a gulf port are given in a preliminary survey of the Texas situation.

Callaway and Hunt Leading In Race for City Recorder

Council Will Choose Johnson's Successor October 6—Many Seek Pro Tem. Office.

Before the heat of the city primary has passed completely, city council will be plunged into another election, as members will be called on at the next meeting, Monday, October 6, to name a recorder to succeed Judge George F. Johnson, who died several weeks ago.

A. W. Callaway, who has served as recorder pro tem. for the past four years, and who has been acting recorder since Judge Johnson became ill about a year ago, has been most prominently mentioned for the post. Present indications are that if anyone is nominated in opposition to Callaway, it will be Mallory Hunt, well-known Atlanta attorney.

Callaway opened an active campaign some time ago, and until the past few days it was thought that he would have no opposition. Both Thomas H. Goodwin and C. Don Miller, attorneys, at one time entered the race, but later withdrew, and both are now candidates for recorder pro tem. Callaway is well known in Atlanta, having been connected with the police department and the recorder's office for many years before being recorder pro tem.

Hunt Well Known.

Hunt also is well known in the city, having actively practiced law here for many years. Considerable agitation has been caused during the past week by a number of Atlanta attorneys, who feel that a lawyer should have either the post of recorder or recorder pro tem. If Hunt is defeated for recorder, it is probable that an attorney will be named recorder pro tem.

A number of others have been named as possible candidates, but the contest apparently has narrowed down to Callaway and Hunt, and indications are that they will be the only two whose names are placed in nomination.

The race for recorder pro tem. is centering much interest, and no less than a dozen candidates have announced for the position and launched intensive campaigns.

Dozen Have Announced.

Among those in the race are Howard Lee Turner, R. J. Davison, Fred L. Tippins, Captain A. J. Holcomb, Murphy Holloway, Richmond Paul, Guy Lindsey, Otus Hewell, C. Don Miller, Thomas H. Goodwin, John I. Cone and Roy Wynne. As yet, there is little to indicate the comparative strength of candidates, but all claim victory. It is probable, however, that a number will withdraw during this week, and that not more than half of the number in the race actually will stay in the race.

Turner at present is a member of the detective department, and for several years was a member of the police force. When the 4:30 court was inaugurated, he was detailed as a clerk in the recorder's office and served for almost a year.

Davison has resided in Atlanta for many years and is well known in social welfare work. He is now employed in the office of Alderman Claude E. Buchanan.

Holloway is a well-known Atlanta attorney; Paul is an employee of the city tax collector; Hewell is a police call officer; Lindsey, a former policeman connected with the bureau of identification; Tippins, a police call officer; and Miller, Goodwin and Wynne, attorneys. Cone was one of the managers of Judge Howard's campaign in the recent county election.

Captain Holcomb has been connected with the police department for many years and has risen from a "beat" assignment to a captaincy. He is now in charge of the plainclothes squad.

Elected Until 1926.

Both rerorder and redorder pro tem. will be elected for the full unexpired terms, which will put them in office until December, 1926.

Although the fight for mayor pro tem. is still more than three months distant, it is sharing interest with the recorder's race. Already a hot contest looms between Alderman W. B. Hartsfield, of the third ward, and Alderman W. B. Duvall, of the third, with friends of both candidates claiming enough pledged votes to insure election.

Alderman Hartsfield declared Saturday that he has 20 pledged votes, whereas 18 constitute a majority, while Dr. Duvall claims that his opponent has only five certain votes, with the remainder either favoring Dr. Duvall or "on the fence."

Alderman J. L. Carpenter, of the eleventh ward, who is the oldest member of council in point of service, will be elected unanimously to fill the unexpired term of Alderman I. N. Ragsdale, this year's mayor pro tem. who takes office as a member of the board of county commissioners on January 1, but who will resign from council before the general election in November. Mr. Carpenter will serve for about six weeks.

The mayor pro tem. presides over sessions of council and acts as mayor in event of the chief executive's illness or absence from the city.

POLITICS, BUSINESS KEEP COOLIDGE BUSY

Washington, September 27.—Business and politics combined today to give President Coolidge a busy program. He conferred with Senator Wadsworth, republican leader of New York, and Mrs. Alvin T. Hert, a vice chairman of the republican national committee, and after attending to some official duties this morning, he slipped away for a half-hour trip of inspection of the offices where the new bonus law is being administered.

Senator Wadsworth was a guest of the president at luncheon at the white house. He said afterward the political situation in New York state was discussed and he seemed enthusiastic over the prospects of both the state and national tickets there.

Mrs. Hert, who was a dinner guest tonight of Mr. and Mrs. Coolidge, told the president this morning that a large vote from the women was in sight. She also pictured a bright outlook for the party on the basis of a recent tour of the middle west and eastern states.

Giving some attention to his future speaking program, Mr. Coolidge took under consideration today an invitation to address the Chamber of Commerce of the United States here next month. He definitely accepted an invitation to dedicate a monument here October 15 to Bishop Francis Asbury of the Methodist Episcopal church.

Two other addresses will be made by Mr. Coolidge here early next month.

A delegation of laundry owners of California, passing through here en route to a convention in Atlantic City, were received by the president this morning, as were delegates to the convention of the National Local Preachers' Association of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

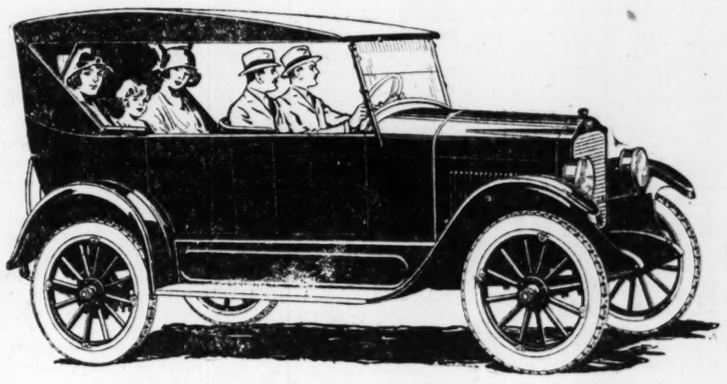

BORGLUM INSPECTS SITE FOR MEMORIAL AMONG BLACK HILLS

Rapid City, S. D., September 27.—Gutzon Borglum, noted American sculptor, engaged in executing a memorial to the Confederacy at Stone Mountain, near Atlanta, Ga., was in the Black Hills today to investigate the possibilities of a national memorial here on a scale similar to that of the Stone mountain project. He expressed a belief that rock formations about Harney Peak, near here, makes it an ideal site for such a project.

ATLANTA SECURES NATIONAL AUTO EQUIPMENT SHOW

National Association Signs Contract To Stage National Exhibit With Southern Auto Show.

An announcement of widespread interest to everyone engaged in the automotive industry in the south was made during the week by the Atlanta Automobile association, whose membership is made up of 175 automobile dealers and allied trade lines of Atlanta. At the board of directors' meeting Thursday, contract was signed with the National Motor and Accessory Manufactures' association, of New York, under the terms of which a national association is authorized to stage in Atlanta a national exhibit of accessories in connection with the regular Southern Automobile show, which has been sponsored and managed by the Atlanta Automobile association for the past five years. The 1925 automobile show is scheduled at the auditorium armory in Atlanta, some time in February, and will contain exhibits of the latest models of practically every make of car represented by dealerships in this section.

Up to the present time the accessory exhibit section of the automobile show has been purely one of local retail dealers, but under the contract just closed with the national association, the largest manufacturers of accessories and automotive equipment will put on special exhibits of their products and make the accessory end of the show national in character. There are only four other cities in the United States with a connection of this kind, namely, New York, Chicago, Cleveland and Boston. The bringing of this national accessory show to Atlanta is a distinct achievement on the part of the local association, and places Atlanta on the map as the center of the automotive industry of the south.

COMING OF DIRIGIBLE DEPENDS ON WEATHER

"Atlanta is on one of two alternate routes of Shenandoah flight. Choice of route depends on weather conditions. (Signed) "Bureau of Aeronautics."

This telegram was received Saturday by Secretary B. S. Barker, of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce, in reply to one sent to the bureau of aeronautics Thursday, in which it was requested that this city be placed on the route the giant dirigible will follow when it leaves New York on or about October 3 for its trans-continental flight to the Pacific coast.

The telegram sent by the chamber of commerce was as follows:

"Atlanta Chamber of Commerce respectfully urges placing of our city on route west for dirigible Shenandoah. We feel that Atlanta occupies a strategic position for a governmental air-mail route and great interest is felt in having Atlanta included in itinerary of the Shenandoah, no matter what the weather."

Announcement made in Washington several days ago stated that the route of the giant air craft would depend upon weather conditions prevailing at the time the flight gets under way. One route, the good weather route, leads north of Atlanta, to Ft. Worth, Texas, but the other route, that scheduled should unfavorable weather conditions prevail, leads by way of this city.

The message sent to Washington by Secretary Barker sought to place Atlanta on the route, regardless of weather conditions. The reply indicates that the original plans will be followed.

WARDEN WILL HARRY GAME LAW VIOLATORS

A vigorous campaign will be waged this season to prosecute hunters who do not provide themselves with licenses, it was announced Saturday by Dr. Frank Edmondson, Fulton county game warden, who stated that 1924-25 licenses are now on sale and can be purchased at the sporting stores of W. H. Perrin company, 60 North Broad street; Heintz & Sons, on Alabama street, and C. H. Walthour company, in the Arcade building. Licenses will also be on sale next week at East Point, College Park, East Atlanta and Buckhead, it was stated.

The Georgia Fish and Game Protective association is wholeheartedly behind the campaign to force hunters to procure licenses, and Dr. Edmondson has made a standing offer of a $10 reward for evidence to convict any person hunting without a license, he said.

Following is announcement of the dates of open season for hunting in Georgia:

Quail, November 20 to March 1; doves, October 16 to January 31; wild turkeys, November 20 to March 1; cat squirrels, October 1 to March 1; deer, (either sex), November 1 to December 31; summer or wood duck, September 1 to January 1; migratory duck, September 1 to April 20; woodcock, September 1 to January 1; plovers, November 20 to March 1; fox (red or grey), September 1 to February 1; opossum, October 1 to February 1; skunk, muskrat, raccoon, beaver, otter, bear, and wild cat, November 20 to March 1; rabbits, no closed season, but license is necessary to hunt.

Sheltering Arms Opens Free Children's Clinics

Association of Day Nurseries Inaugurates Schedule for Larger Health Service.

Recognizing the fact that the Day nursery—caring as it does for the child from infancy to school age and beyond—is in a strategic position to meet the problem of the increasing number of under-nourished and sometimes defective children, the board of directors of the Sheltering Arms has established a weekly clinic at the Osgood Sanders nursery, 142 West Baker street (near Luckie), under the able direction of a number of Atlanta's leading specialists. At the same time, the John Barclay nursery, 1080 Marietta street, is headquarters for one of the baby health centers sponsored by the city health department once a month.

Mrs. Dan Collier Elkin is chairman of the clinic on Baker street, and the good already accomplished through a period of only a few weeks can scarcely be estimated. A thorough physical examination and vaccination is required before admission to the nurseries, and the record of each child and its condition is kept on file. Mothers are given an opportunity to have diseased tonsils and adenoids removed without cost to themselves, and all dental troubles are detected and corrected as early as possible. Through their contact with the nurseries, these mothers are taught the principles of health, and what is best for their children in every way. Special health suggestions prepared by the National Federation of Day Nurseries, New York, are ready for distribution in all the nurseries at the early fall mothers' meetings, when the parents are invited to have supper at the nurseries.

Special Dietary.

Additionally, each of the four nurseries operated by the Sheltering Arms has adopted the dietary required of all registered institutions by the national federation. This dietary, prepared under the guidance of such eminent authorities as Dr. Charles Hendee Smith (author of "Proper Feeding of Children," written for the nutritional clinic of Bellevue hospital), and Mrs. Mary Swartz Rose, Ph. D. (author of "Feeding the Family"), provides one pint of sweet milk for each child through six years, and specially prepared food for others through 12 years—a maximum amount of nourishment at a minimum cost. All recipes accompany this dietary, and have been arranged to insure the proper number of calories. A working schedule to meet local conditions and reduce expense through judicious buying of the best materials has been prepared for each of the nurseries, and the chairmen are enthusiastic in their plans for a larger service than has ever before been possible.

Following a health survey of the nurseries, a large percentage of the children were found with some minor physical defect, easily remedied if taken in hand promptly, but the discovery of the trouble scarcely ever lead to its correction through a report to the parent, as these parents are financially unable to bear any expense in such matters. It became important to provide treatment, in order that these boys and girls should not be handicapped in future life by defects which would prevent their development into the highest types of men and women. "Better Citizens" has long been the slogan of the Sheltering Arms, and 10-year-old children weighing 48 pounds could not be lightly recognized.

Well Equipped.

Well equipped with modern conveniences, separate sanitary supplies, individual ventilated lockers, kindergartens, playgrounds, an excellent dietary, and competent attendants, the Sheltering Arms nurseries offer to Atlanta one of its highest opportunities along health lines for the child of preschool age, as well as the large number of school children under their care. Directed by a group of earnest women whose desire it is to minister to the needs of little children in a constructive way, to help make less difficult the lot of mothers whose lives are hard—thus strengthening the home—the real rock foundation of society—no stronger factor exists in the social welfare field of Atlanta today.

The Sheltering Arms has abandoned its Tag day—the first day of its kind in Atlanta—and will be numbered among the institutions calling for their annual support through the Community chest campaign in November. Much benefit has been derived from the social service exchange, established by the chest.

Southeastern Fair Opens Annual Show Saturday

Program Indicates Greater Fair This Year, in All Departments, Than Ever Before.

The gates of the Southeastern fair will swing open next Saturday morning for the ninth annual event and will continue through the following week, eight days in all, counting one Sunday, on which date the grounds will be open to the public, although the fair buildings containing the exhibits will be closed.

The amusement bill programmed is a good one, and is well featured to entertain all classes of visitors. Coming from sensational successes in the west, the Texas Red Hussar band will furnish the music for the full time of the fair. The band carries 25 members.

Opening day, October 4, the championship automobile races will be staged on Lakewood track, the list of entries carrying the names of the world's most famous and daring drivers. Exciting auto polo contests before the grandstand will fill the periods between races. The great exhibition buildings will all be open, the Rubin & Cherry carnival shows will perform, and the evening will be enlivened by the Atlanta Passing revue, which, with the fireworks display, will have a place on the program nightly during the fair. The harness racing will begin on Monday, October 6, and continue five afternoons, and Secretary Striplin states that the entries are filling with the best steppers in the south.

No Delay By Rain.

The rains of the past week have not interfered with the building of booths and other activities inside the great exposition buildings, and work on some of the largest displays ever shown here has been going ahead, so there will be no delay in throwing open the doors to the first visitors. Parking facilities have been made larger and will be better regulated than could be done in former years.

Monday, October 6, has been designated school children's day, and all city and county schools will have a holiday, the children being admitted on that date for 15 cents. Children of schools anywhere in the state are invited to come and a record-breaking attendance is confidently expected. Tuesday will be inter-civic club day, and the attendance of Kiwanians, Rotarians, Lions, Civitans, Chamber of Commerce and others will feature, while Friday has been set on the calendar as Georgia Press day, when all Georgia pencil pushers will be the guests of the fair. Other special days will be announced as they are fixed on the program.

The live-stock exhibit, where $25,000 in premiums will be distributed, is expected to maintain its high standard, and the agricultural success of the year in the state to make for the largest county and individual exhibits ever shown in the state. Cheese, butter and dairy products should excell in quality all former showings, as this industry in the whole south is admittedly assuming an important position.

Apple Exhibits.

The apple exhibit has always attracted the attention and admiration of fair visitors, and this year new exhibitors will compete with the large corporation which has heretofore easily carried off all the big premiums. These exhibits have done much to bring the Georgia apple into its own as an important money crop for the mountain section of the state.

Judging by the entries for the poultry department already received all kinds of chickens will be well represented at the fair, while the pigeon and rabbit shows promise to be very good.

The Atlanta Kennel club will put on a dog show this year, and much better quarters and arrangement of kennels will be provided. Many lovers of man's best friend will visit the fair to admire and pay tribute to the pure-bred specimens collected there.

The invitation extended the colored people of the state to put on a department of their own at the fair has been accepted and they are actively at work to show something of the accomplishments of their race.

School Work.

Schools and school work will feature in the program, and the Georgia State Sunday School association will have a larger display of the progress and work of the churches among the young people of the state.

The Southeastern fair school for boys brings two from each county in the state as guests of the fair, instructors being supplied for them by the state and government agricultural departments. Live stock judging contests by the club boys and students will feature, while the girls will stage a bread-baking contest and present interesting showings of their home demonstration work.

Women's Department.

The woman's work department, without which there has never been a successful fair, is already in receipt of many exhibits and the work of their arrangement is going on as they come in. Arts and crafts embrace so many things peculiarly feminine that it would be impossible to recite them. Individual and club booths are also covered in this department, and there will be keen competition for prizes again this year.

One of the new features and a drawing card for the fair will be the mammoth flower show which the florists, seedmen and horticulturists of Atlanta are to stage in the center of the big automobile building, occupying one-half of its floor space. Every member of the local club has enthusiastically indorsed it and agreed to cooperate and contribute to this rare collection of flowers, ferns, plants and palms, according to E. A. Wachendorff, president of the club. John Wilson and J. G. Schattmaier, two of the best-known floral decorators of the country, will be in active charge of the arrangements. A survey of the greenhouses makes available for exhibition purposes enough fine stock to change the entire show daily, which will be done.

Put Dogs on Trail Of Incendiaries In Parsonage Fire

Fulton county policemen Saturday set bloodhounds on the trail of alleged firebugs who, early Saturday morning set fire to the parsonage of the Collins Memorial Methodist church, at Bolton, Ga.

Rev. J. W. King, pastor of the church, told County Policeman Williams and Donahue, who investigated the fire, that he and his family were asleep when he was awakened by a crackling noise and found the entire rear end of his home ablaze. The officers stated that there could be no question of the incendiary origin of the fire.

After the pastor had hastily removed his family to the street, fire apparatus was summoned from Atlanta, but arrived too late to save the parsonage. The loss is estimated at $6,000.

When the investigators of the fire found footprints and unmistakable traces of oil in the rear of the house, the county bloodhounds were brought to the scene and took up the trail of the firebugs, following it to the edge of a wood, and there losing it.

ST. MARK'S PREPARES FOR BIG RALLY DAY

Extensive preparations are being made by members of St. Mark's Methodist church and Sunday school for a "Rally Day," to be held on October 5. Hundreds of former members, all teachers and classes, and many visitors are expected to be present and participate in the exercises.

St. Mark's Sunday school has made arrangements to organize a special class for the nurses who bring small children.

Use of chromite by American leather and steel industries has made the United States the world's largest consumer of the mineral.

Original Musical Score For Big "Passing Revue"

Many Original Strains To Be Introduced in Southeastern Fair Beauty Spectacle.

There's be fresh tunes to whistle and new favorites in melodies in Atlanta, after the Atlanta Passing revue is presented next week at the Southeastern fair, where it will be the nightly entertainment feature.

The theme of a special musical score being arranged for the spectacle by W. T. Cox, director of the famous Red Hussar band, will be "Atlanta."

Atlanta girls, Atlanta modes and manners, Atlanta prosperity and development, Atlanta glory and promise for the future, will be interpreted in the score, the principal detail of which will be a sprightly and engaging note developed in an original overture dedicated to "Miss Georgia."

Then there will be, for the biggest ensemble, the song made famous by the Junior chamber of commerce, "Toot! Toot! Atlanta!" with an interpretative setting and action.

Mammoth Choruses.

Old favorites, modern popular airs, and many original strains will be combined in the entire score, which will be played by the Red Hussar band, while big choruses—some of the ensembles will include more than 100 girls—trip through their numbers.

The "Miss Georgia" theme will be presented during the appearance of the Georgia Beauty ballet, whose members will appear twice at each performance. This is a bevy of fair young women selected as representatives of 40 or 50 Georgia cities and communities, from whom will be selected "Miss Georgia," the state beauty queen.

An engaging figure in this spectacle will be "Miss Atlanta Faire," the representative of Atlanta in the Georgia Beauty ballet. She will be selected from the several hundred girls enrolled for parts in the spectacle, the choice being determined by votes. So heated is the contest, according to fair association officials Saturday, that any one of 150 girls is a possible winner, the field being closely behind the leaders—who were at the hour of reviewing the votes at the fair association headquarters, 130 Peachtree street, Miss Irene Pergantis, Miss Madeleine Hauff, Miss Connie Collette, Miss Louise Kelly, Miss Annie Lamb, Mrs. H. T. Sedgwick, Miss Nell Tillman, Miss Mary Frances Pittman, Miss Emma Brantley and Miss Jane Decatur Reid.

Under the eye and precept of Miss Nell Sullivan, ballet director, and Fred Pfeffer, casting director, the big ensembles in which the Atlanta girls will be presented in support of professional stars of the vaudeville and musical comedy stage, are being daily rehearsed at the roof of the Hotel Cecil.

The fair will open October 4 and close October 11. It will close upon a note of glory, with the coronation of "Miss Georgia" in a ceremony, for which will be revived the color of medieval pageantry.

$100,000 Fire Loss.

Watkins, N. Y., September 27.—Fifteen places of business, constituting the larger part of the business section of this village, were destroyed by fire which started in a Madison avenue blacksmith shop early today. The loss was estimated at more than $100,000.

THREAT OF KLAN STIRS MILL TOWN

Steubenville, Ohio, September 27.—With disorders between klansmen and Sons of Italy said to be threatened at Follansbee, W. Va., across the Ohio river from this city, 40 special police, sworn in early today by Mayor L. A. Dillar, and 20 deputy sheriffs, headed by Sheriff J. W. Stephens, of Brooke county, West Virginia, are patrolling the streets of the mill town.

Klansmen, whose permit to stage a street parade and demonstration was revoked last night by Mayor Dillar, informed officials this morning that they would disregard his order and parade as scheduled. They also announced they would march in violation of the mayor's original order.

Sons of Italy, who had agreed to postpone their annual jubilee set for today, announced that if the klan paraded, they would also. They proceeded to decorate one section of the city with their flags and banners, while klansmen marked off their line of march in other sections of the town with large K. K. K.'s.

Sheriff Stephens on his arrival stated that no demonstration of any kind would be held and stated he was prepared to back up his orders with a machine gun.

HOW ELECTION CAN GO INTO CONGRESS

tucky nor any other one of these states has ever gone other than democratic in a presidential election. These are Davis' irreducible minimum:

Alabama	12
Arkansas	9
Florida	6
Georgia	14
Kentucky	13
Louisiana	10
Mississippi	10
North Carolina	12
South Carolina	9
Texas	20
Virginia	12

Border State Situation.

Starting with these southern states, certain for Davis, let us take next a group of states lying along the border of the south. These states are what might be called semi-democratic states. All of them have gone democratic more often than they have gone republican. In normal years they are safely democratic states. As to practically all of them, they always go democratic except in such republican landslide years as 1904 and 1920. These states, which Davis is assumed to have a better chance of carrying than Coolidge, are:

Arizona	3
Maryland	8
Missouri	13
Nevada	3
New Mexico	3
Oklahoma	10
Tennessee	12

The total of this group, which Davis must be conceded to have a much better chance of carrying than Coolidge, is 57.

To these add one more border state, West Virginia. West Virginia is the only one of the border states that has gone republican more often than democratic. This year, because it is Davis' home state, it is reasonable to lump it with the other Davis states. On this assumption we now have a total of 192 electoral votes that Davis may reasonably be expected to carry. This computation restricts Davis' strength wholly to the universally democratic southern states and to the prevailingly democratic border states. There is not included in this statement of Davis' strength any one of the northern doubtful states.

50 Votes to La Follette.

So much for what is reasonable to expect that Davis can hold away from Coolidge.

Now consider what La Follette may take from Coolidge. In this field there is more doubt, because there is no precedent. But on the best information now available it may be said that La Follette has a chance to carry the following states, all of them in the northwestern corner:

Wisconsin	13
Minnesota	12
North Dakota	5
South Dakota	5
Idaho	4
Washington	7

This makes a total of 50 electoral votes that La Follette may be said to have a chance to carry.

If Davis carries 192 and La Follette carries 50, this makes 242 electoral votes taken away from Coolidge. It leaves for Coolidge 289 electoral votes. This would be enough to make Coolidge safe, for the number required to elect is 266. On this computation, therefore, Coolidge's margin of safety would be 23.

But in all this we have taken no account of the possibility of Davis carrying any states in the north whatever. And if Davis should carry any one large northern state, or any two fairly large northern states, or any three or four small northern states—in either event he would destroy Coolidge's margin of safety.

Works Out Combinations.

If Davis should carry New York alone, with its 45 electoral votes, Coolidge would not be elected.

If Davis should carry Illinois alone, with its 29 electoral votes, Coolidge would not be elected.

If Davis should carry Ohio alone, with its 24 electoral votes, Coolidge would not be elected.

If Davis should carry Indiana, with its 15 electoral votes, and New Jersey, with its 14 electoral votes, Coolidge would not be elected.

If Davis should carry Colorado, with its 6 electoral votes; Nebraska, with its 8 electoral votes; Rhode Island, with its 5 electoral votes, and, in addition, either Indiana or New Jersey—in that event Coolidge would not be elected.

To consider another combination: If La Follette should carry Iowa, with its 13 electoral votes, and Davis should carry either Indiana or New Jersey, Coolidge would not be elected.

And among the states mentioned there are various other combinations which would prevent Coolidge from being elected.

It must be realized therefore that, looking at the campaign as a question of whether Coolidge will or will not win in November, it cannot be said, on the basis of precedent as regards the democratic states, and on the basis of conceding to La Follette as many as seven states, that Coolidge has a very comfortable margin. The republican managers realize this, and it is the basis of their strategy.

Situation in Deadlock.

Let us now consider what may happen if Coolidge fails to win in November, and if the election is thrown into congress.

I have said that the democrats count on winning in either one of two ways. They count either on electing Davis at the popular election in November through carrying a considerable number of northern states; or they count on Davis being the next president if Coolidge is prevented from winning in November and if the election goes into congress. Just how the democrats can rely on this latter assumption is not clear, at first glance, but on analysis it is realized that the democrats have some justification for their reasoning.

In the first place, if the campaign continues as one designed to prevent Coolidge from winning in November, we shall see an interesting development. Inevitably as the campaign becomes heated there will be a tendency for the democrats and the La Follette party to cooperate, with the purpose of uniting to prevent Coolidge from winning the popular election. At present both the democrats and the La Follette leaders decry all talk of cooperating. But as the campaign becomes heated the temptation will be strong. Already I hear the suggestion in the confidential conversation of some of the leaders. The benefits and the effectiveness of such cooperation are so clear that it will be almost impossible to prevent local leaders in some states from attempting it. The simplest way to effect it would be for the democrats to withdraw their candidate in states which La Follette has a chance of carrying; and for La Follette to withdraw in states which the democrats have a chance of carrying. The ordinary way to do this would be, for example, for the democrats to "withdraw their electors" in such a state as Washington during the last few days of the campaign, or, for example, for the La Follette leaders to "withdraw their electors" in such a state as Oklahoma. This was the device by which aid was given, through a third party, to the victory of a democrat, Grover Cleveland, over Harrison in 1892. In that year, as this year, there was a third party candidate, representing discontent with the republican party, then in power. And in that year there was practiced what this year there will be the temptation to practice, namely, a union of the democrats and the third party in some states by the withdrawal of the electors of one or the other. In 1892 the democrats and the third party united in Colorado, Idaho, Kansas, North Dakota and Wyoming. Whether we are to have in the present campaign a duplicate of this performance of 1892 will appear shortly. It may be that changes of election laws in the various states may have made it more difficult to "withdraw electors" at the last moment.

Possible Combination.

The union of the democrats and the La Follette party in some states as outlined here would be merely one way of bringing about the defeat of Coolidge in the maximum number of states. Whether that takes place or does not take place only has a bearing on how many states will be carried against Coolidge. It is possible for enough states to be carried against Coolidge whether this happens or does not happen.

Let us now turn to the assumption that Coolidge fails to win at the popular election in November and that the election is thrown into congress; and let us examine the basis for the democratic expectation that in the event of the election being thrown into congress the next president will be Davis. The democratic reasoning runs as follows:

In congress two things will be done. The lower house will proceed to select a president from among the highest three candidates, Coolidge, Davis and La Follette, and the senate will proceed to select a vice president from among the two highest candidates, Dawes and Bryan—assuming that Wheeler runs third.

In those last two sentences there is an essential and important technicality. The senate will select the vice president from among the highest two candidates, whereas the house will select the president from among the highest three.

From this and other circumstances it follows that the senate will do its work first. There is no reason why the senate should not make its choice at a single ballot. The choice of the senate, it is assumed, would be Charles W. Bryan. It is true that in the senate the republicans have a nominal majority of 51 (50 with Senator Colt, of Rhode Island, dead) to 45. If all the republican senators would vote for the republican candidate for vice president Dawes would be chosen. But the democratic assumption is—and it is a reasonable assumption—that some five or six republican senators would not vote for Dawes, but would vote for Bryan. The republican senators who are counted on to do this are the ones who, though nominally republican, commonly follow La Follette's leadership. They include La Follette himself, Ladd and Frazier, of North Dakota; Brookhart, of Iowa, and Norris, of Nebraska.

The democratic assumption is, therefore, that, with the election thrown into congress, the senate would promptly elect Charles W. Bryan. From this they go on to the assumption that the republican members of the lower house, seeing the accomplished fact of Bryan being vice president, and realizing that Bryan would be president unless the lower house should break its deadlock and elect a president—the assumption is that the republican members of the lower house, seeing this and preferring any alternative rather than that Bryan should be president, would transfer enough of their votes to Davis to elect him.

To understand this latter assumption we must examine in detail just what is the situation of the lower house with regard to the presidency. These facts and figures about to be recited have been told over and over again, but they are essential to understanding:

It is the business of the lower house to elect a president from among the three highest—Coolidge, Davis and La Follette. In the lower house the members vote not as individuals but by states. That is to say, each state delegation has one vote. The state of New York, with forty-three congressmen, has one vote. The state of Arizona, with one congressman, has one vote. What will happen is that the members of congress from each state will caucus, and that those states in which a majority of the members are republican will cast one republican vote for Coolidge, while those states in which a majority of the members are democrats will cast one vote for Davis.

In congress, as at present constituted and omitting any question of death or resignation between now and next February, there are twenty-two state delegations that are republican, twenty state delegations that are democratic; one, Wisconsin, that is for La Follette, and five that are equally divided.

To elect it is necessary that twenty-five state delegations, or a majority of the whole forty-eight, should vote for some one candidate. Obviously none of the candidates would have the necessary majority.

Five Delegations Divided.

At this point it is the five state delegations which are evenly divided that become important. These delegations are: Maryland, Montana, New Jersey, New Hampshire, Nebraska.

These five, being tied within themselves—each being half republican and half democratic—would have no vote. But—and here is the meat of the democratic assumption—if one republican congressman in each of these states should swing his vote to the democrats, that would add the necessary five delegations to elect Davis.

The democratic assumption is that five republican congressman would do this. On this point the democrats reason thus: The republicans will see in front of them the accomplished fact that if the deadlock in the lower house continues until March 4, the next president of the United States would be Charles W. Bryan. The democrats think that the thought of a Bryan in the white house would be so odious to those conservative interests which the republicans reflect, that, rather than see such a thing happen, they would vote for Davis.

Whether the necessary number of republican congressmen would really do this; whether the republican party as a whole would adopt this policy of choosing Davis as the alternative to Bryan—all that is anybody's guess. Nobody can accurately foretell what would be the public psychology, or the private psychology of individual republican congressman, under such circumstances.

SNEEZE BETRAYS CROOKED 'BOOKIE' TO BET WINNERS

London, September 27.—George Frederick Mills, of Windsor, worked out a real system to beat the races.

He started business as a race-course bookmaker. People who went to make bets were attracted by his sign of "Honest George Mills." If they won and went to collect, they found a man of about the same size, but doing business under cover of a thick brown beard and the sign of "Old Jim Daily."

"Old Jim" sneezed suddenly after the third race and a bettor, looking for "Honest George," did not like the way his whiskers acted.

The bettor pulled the whiskers off, with the result that Mills, nursing a sore nose, was fined $125 at the Windsor police court for welshing.

CALHOUN FARMERS PLOUGH-IN STALK IN WAR ON WEEVIL

Arlington, Ga., September 25.—(Special.)—A cotton stalk destroying campaign is well under way in Calhoun county. Meetings have been held at Edison, Morgan and Arlington, where is has been shown that by plowing up stalks, thereby cutting off the boll weevil's food supply, the fight against the pest in 1925 will be easier.

Farmers have agreed to plow up stalks by October 15. County Agent A. E. Gibson has been busy for the past 10 days in the interest of the campaign. He states he is very much encouraged over the outlook and believes there will be very few stalks standing in Calhoun county by October 15.

Negro Bound Over For Aiding Prisoner To Elude Officers

Charged with speeding and reckless driving, Charlie Williams, negro, of 110 Terry street, was fined $51 in recorder's court Saturday afternoon and bound over to the state courts on a charge of aiding a prisoner to escape. Both charges grew out of the escape Thursday night of Arthur Barfield, young white man, who was serving a term in Fulton county jail, and who fled from officers accompanying him to see his sick mother.

The negro was arrested by Call Officers M. B. Johnson and M. D. Cartwright following Barfield's escape, and information given them that Williams was the driver of the automobile that Barfield jumped in. At a late hour Saturday night police had been unsuccessful in their search for Barfield and Hope New, who is said to be a close friend of the escaped man, and who officers believe left with him.

Miss Estelle Williams, of Highland avenue, appeared at police headquarters shortly after Barfield had made his get-away and declared he had beat her when she refused to leave town with him, exhibiting as proof a black eye and badly distorted features.

Texas Flea Weevil Is Found in Cotton Of Sumter County

Americus, Ga., September 27.—(Special.)—The destructive Texas cotton flea beetle has been located in cotton fields belonging to J. C. Brown, seven miles out of Americus, in Sumter county. Identification of the weevil followed a visit here of a party of entomologists headed by Ira W. Williams. C. W. Biddle, an attache of the bureau of entomology, of Atlanta, who accompanied Mr. Williams to Americus, is here still and will make a study of the weevil and his habits.

The weevil operates in a manner similar to the boll weevil, puncturing a small hole at the base of cotton squares which causes these to shrivel and drop off. The puncture is often so small as to defy detection until its effect is noticed on the square itself. So far as known here no poison has yet been evolved that will properly control the flea weevil, which is so called because of its habit of "hopping" like an ordinary flea.

The weevil first appeared in Texas several years ago. It is believed that the flea weevils found in Sumter county are the first to appear in Georgia.

In some parts of Europe the textile industry is enjoying great activity, while in other places only a few hundred miles away, it is suffering depression.

TWO MILLION SEE NEW STUDEBAKER FIRST 36 HOURS

Studebaker History Claims No New Car Showing Equal to That of 1925 Models.

South Bend, Ind., September 27.—Records were broken at the initial public showing of the 15 new Studebaker models on Saturday and Sunday, September 13-14, not only in the numbers of attendance, but in the enthusiastic and practically unanimous approval expressed, men long in the automobile industry declare. From actual count of the crowds who visited over 3,000 Studebaker showrooms throughout America, where new cars were on display, it has been established that a total of over 2,000,000 people went to see what Studebaker had done during the first 36 hours.

From every Studebaker dealer come reports that the rush of keeping up with business, since then, has made it impossible to prepare and send in a statement of the opening-day attendance earlier.

20 to 30 Cars Appraised Hourly.

During the rush of the first 36 hours many Studebaker dealers, particularly in larger cities, were completely unable to keep pace with the orders for new cars. Showrooms were kept open until midnight, in many instances, and even then people had to be asked to leave.

In nearly every large city old cars were appraised at the rate of from 20 to 30 an hour, on proposed trade-in sales. And it is generally reported that salesmen could not begin to serve all who desired to place orders.

Automotive authorities state that nothing since the advent of the self-starter has so sensationally aroused the interest of American car-owners as the new-type Studebaker body—the duplex phaeton. In every showroom the biggest crowd was invariably centered about these beautiful, radically new models.

Duplex Body a Sensation.

An upper structure, framed and shaped in steel, is integral with the lower body—a fundamentally new principle. It was explained that this construction makes possible a beauty of top lines harmonious with the lower lines, and obviously permanent.

By use of substantial curtains, operated on concealed spring rollers, a powerful, alert, open car is converted in less than 30 seconds into an entirely inclosed car, offering thorough comfort and protection from wind, rain or snow. These curtains are each fitted with a special, extra-wide window, and so provide an entirely unique combination of open-car advantages with four-door closed-car protection.

Unexpected Beauty Creates Furore.

A very flood of telegrams and letters has poured into the main Studebaker offices here.

The commandingly beautiful lines that distinguish each of the new cars do not follow anything that other American or foreign makers have attempted, it is said. They have excited comment altogether unique in automobile history, it is positively stated upon authority.

"Apparently this is exactly what the public has been waiting for—a note of absolute difference from the average, the usual, yet in perfect keeping with good taste," one official declared today, as he plowed through an accumulation of enthusiastic communications.

Details Closely Observed.

"And people have taken the keenest interest in each detail of this appearance; the new, extra-deep-crowned fenders built for balloon tires, the big, dark tires themselves, the natural wood wheels, the brilliant, nickeled radiators," the same official is quoted. "The satiny, new lacquer finish which is used on six of the new models has come in for a great share of this praise, as have the unusually attractive color schemes our designers have worked out.

"The same is true of the genuine Spanish leather upholstery of duplex models or the fine, soft mohair of closed bodies. The new winged radiator caps, the headlights and cowl-lights—each of entirely new and unusual design, each piece of hardware—which speaks its own high quality, the utter completeness of equipment with these new models. I personally believe that these smaller details have done as much as any one of the larger betterments to convince the American public, in shorter time than ever before accomplished, that Studebaker has produced new cars of value such as is without precedent in automobile history."

AUTO MEN TO CONDUCT ADVERTISING FOR XMAS

At the general membership meeting of the Atlanta Automobile association held Wednesday evening on the roof garden of the Cecil hotel, at which nearly 150 members and their executives were present, the organization unanimously approved and recommended the plans submitted by special committee, covering a co-operative advertising campaign during the next three months, to promote the sale of accessories and automotive equipment for Christmas presents. The campaign will be based upon the fundamental appeal to the car-owning public of "buy something for the car for Christmas." Similar campaigns have been put over in former years in a number of large cities throughout the United States, and have been phenomenally successful.

It is proposed to use the three big Atlanta daily papers, primarily for display advertising; this to be coupled up with various other forms of publicity to secure maximum results. Quite a number of the members of the association have already voluntarily sent in their subscriptions to the campaign in amounts ranging from $25 to $100 each, and every day, from now on, subscriptions will be sent in to the executive secretary's office, 412 Gould building. A bulletin has just been mailed out by the executive secretary explaining briefly the purpose of the campaign and the objects to be accomplished by it.

Sam E. Levy, chairman of the general steering committee of 25, appointed from the association to manage the campaign, will call another meeting of the committee at the Capital City club, Wednesday for a 12:30 luncheon, for the purpose of making final plans to put the campaign over. The campaign has been so designed that it will appeal to the business interests of every member of the association whether he be automobile dealer, wholesaler, accessory dealer, or member of any other allied automotive trade line in the association.

OAKLAND TO ESTABLISH DISTRICT OFFICE HERE

In harmony with the expansion program of the Oakland Motor Car company, one of the General Motors group, according to a statement issued by C. W. Matheson, vice president and director of sales, district offices are to be established in twenty of the most important trade centers throughout the country, including Atlanta.

"These district offices are to be divisions of the general sales department at the factory," explained Mr. Matheson. "The manager of each district office will have charge of the selection and supervision of all Oakland dealers in his district.

"While the plan is a distinct departure from the former Oakland sales policy, it is very similar to the system so long and successfully employed by some of the largest motor car companies, notably Dodge Brothers and Chevrolet."

"Under this system there will be twenty veteran assistant general sales managers functioning in the twenty zones under the director of sales at the factory."

"The dealers in each district will take up all sales, advertising and service questions with the district manager, thus expediting action on important matters and also accomplishing personal and helpful supervision of these activities with each individual dealer in a manner not equally convenient or possible at longer range."

RECRUITS PRESENTED TO FLAG AT G. M. C.

Recruits at Georgia Military academy were presented to the colors in a unique and impressive ceremony last week, the custom of the old-line regiments being closely followed.

The entire regiment was drawn up in hollow-square, with spectators forming the fourth side. Recruits, first-year men, faced the older cadets. The colors were brought before the cadets and presented to the recruits. After presentation of the colors, the regiment disbanded and reformed on another part of the parade ground, this action being symbolic of the fact that although when leaving school cadets follow many and widely separated walks of life, they are subject to recall to patriotic service.

Colonel Woodward, president and founder of G. M. A., delivered a patriotic address nad presented the flag to the new cadets. Colonel Nash, commandant, spoke on "The State Flag and the School Flag."

The school has every available room filled, it is said, and has rented three houses to care for the overflow.

ATLANTA SOLOIST, FEATURE OF VICTOR RECORD RELEASES

J. Foster Barnes, former Emory university student and well known in Atlanta musical circles, is featured as a soloist in new Victor record releases, announced Saturday.

"God Will Take Care Of You" and "I Would Be Like Jesus" are his contributions to this week's outlay of Victor releases, although local Victor dealers believe he is destined to occupy a prominent place on the Victor personnel staff of artists.

It is a pleasing choice which Bauer has made for his Victor bow—a familiar Rubinstein melody and one of the most hauntingly melodious of Schubert's compositions. "Kammenoi-Ostrow" is the first composer's imaginative echo of island bells in the Neva. The second is a demonstration of the "semi-staccato" touch—but a thing of beauty.

Galli-Curci's record of the "Slumber Song" (Si, Carina) from "Dinorah" has some startling bits of display, shared by a flute and 'cello. Sir Henry Rowley Bishop's voice-and-flute song, "Pretty Mocking Bird" is its companion.

De Luca is heard this week in two Italian songs. "Canta il Mare" (Song of the Sea) has a waltz-like rhythm, with deft voice coloring. "Occhi de Fata" (Eyes of Fate) is dreamy and infinitely tender.

The Goldman band plays a march based on themes from Wagner's "Ring." With it is paired "Ronde d'Amour" (Dance of Love).

"Mandalay" and "There's Yes! Yes! In Your Eyes" are sung this week on a record by Peerless quartet.

Helen Clark and Elliott Shaw add the seasoning this week in "sentimental fox-trots."

Waring's Pennsylvanians anticipate the so-called melancholy days with a fox-trot record, "Dreary Weather." The same organization brightens with "Any Way the Wind Blows."

Ted Weems and Jack Shilkret and their respective orchestras enliven things with "Who Wants a Bad Little Boy?" and "Susquehanna Home," respectively.

Completing the program the Benson orchestra of Chicago plays two fox-trots, "Sing a Little Song" and "I Adore You After All."

GEORGIA STUDENTS URGED TO ATTEND SERVICES SUNDAY

Athens, Ga., September 25.—(Special.)—University of Georgia students have been invited to the student services at the First Baptist church Sunday night at 8 o'clock, Morton S. Hodgson, chairman of the committee in charge, announces.

EDUCATION MAGAZINE LAUDS SUMTER SYSTEM

The August-September number of Home, School and Community, published by the Georgia Council of Social Agencies, is the first issue appearing as the offiical organ of the Georgia Education association and is being sent by that association to each of its 5,000 members, it was announced Saturday.

The feature article in the current issue is a story of the consolidation and high standards in the schools of Sumter county, where forty schools were abolished and replaced by ten complete nine months' schools, taught by well-paid college graduates. The article is written by Judge J. E. D. Shipp, of Americus, whom State Superintendent N. H. Ballard styles "the grand old man of Sumter."

There is an interesting discussion of "The Control of School Finances by City Officials," "Mob and Ring Rule in the Georgia Legislature," the program for American education week, a department edited by Klye Alfriend, secretary of the Georgia Education association, "Libraries in School Programs" and many other interesting items including collection of reprints from many sources reflecting on Georgia's educational provisions.

The October issue will carry an account of plans of the Georgia Education association to mobilize the state's educational forces on November 22, which is one of the most unique and surprising undertakings ever planned by a state education association it is said.

GORDON BAPTIST TO RUN REVIVAL ALL NEXT WEEK

During the week the daily messages will be on the Christian fundamentals; "The Inspiration of the Scriptures," "The Deity of Christ," "The Crucifixion," "The Resurrection," "The Ascension," and "The Second Coming."

Q. L. Frye leads the singing, assisted by the Landers quartet.

AJAX MOTORS TO BUILD COMPLETE AUTOMOBILE

No industrial move in recent years has been enveloped in so much mystery as has surrounded the recent formation of The Ajax Motors company, as a subsidiary organization entirely owned by The Nash Motors company and with C. W. Nash as its president. This company is housed in the former Mitchell motors plant at Racine, Wisconsin, which was finally secured by Nash after spirited bidding on the part of other manufacturers. The notable career of Mr. Nash and the exceptional success that has attended his enterprises naturally has inspired widespread comment as to his plans for this new company. Rumors that have been given extensive circulation in the industry, among bankers and many thousands of automobile owners who have followed Nash's rise to a place of preemience among American manufacturers, are now partially set at rest by a direct statement from Mr. Nash. "This subsidiary organization, The Ajax Motors company, will not build merely a motor as gossip has had it but will produce a complete automobile," states C. W. Nash. "At the present time I am not in a position to divulge the exact character of the car but I can say that it will be a complete surprise when announced owing to the nature of the engineering and the mechanical developments now being carried to completion by our staff of engineers.

The name Ajax was chosen because of the mythological significance it holds. Homer's Illiad mentions Ajax, the legendary Greek hero, many times for his heroic deeds. Particularly was he swift-footed we are told. In fact he was honored as one of Greece's very fleetest runners. Another distinguishing characteristic of Ajax was the power he displayed in hurling the javelin. So in this figure of ancient times we have two of the things the modern car—Ajax—will also possess—speed and power embodied at a price that will make it highly attractive to the great mass of prospective motor car purchasers. Our plans for this new car are in direct accordance with our formulated policy for adding substantially to the ramifications of The Nash Motors company and putting it in even more commanding position among the world's greatest producers of passenger cars. Few people realize just how exceptional our record of advancement has been until they review the history of the automobile industry. The first figures worthy of credence show that in 1899 there were 3,700 passenger cars produced by all makers and their total value in dollars and cents was $4,750,000. This is less than a normal month's production for The Nash Motors company today. By 1910 the annual production for the industry had risen to 181,000 and the dollars and cents volume to $213,000,000. At this point the records show 302 manufacturers in business. By January 1911 there were 314 companies engaged in manufacturing cars and the production for that year rose to nearly 200,000 units with a value of $240,770,000. From then on, though production and dollars and cents value increased largely year by year, the ranks of manufacturers decreased steadily until 1916, in which year in August we entered the field. At this juncture there were about 220 other makers and the production for the year was nearly 1,500,000 cars, of which we contributed of course a very few. By January of 1917 we were gaining headway rapidly and the name Nash and the reputation of the car for excellence was making itself felt. Our more recent progress because of its unusual rapidity is a familiar story to a large share of the American public, but it is worth commenting upon the fact that from a standing start in 1916 with 220 older concerns already deeply rooted in the business soil we advanced in eight years to ninth place among the 67 manufacturers now in business including Ford. When the new Ajax takes its place among the cars being marketed we look to see even this high place measurably bettered."

DODGE BROTHERS REDUCE PRICES ON "SPECIAL" CARS

In view of the upward trend in automobile prices, considerable surprise was occasioned by Dodge Brothers' recent announcement of a reduction in prices of their special type cars.

Dodge Brothers were able to do the unexpected, according to the factory announcement, on account of the increased volume of their purchases of special equipment for the special type care.

Dodge Brothers' special types consist of the standard cars equipped with accessories which produce the utmost in comfort and convenience and appearance of the car. Among these are steel disc wheels, five balloon type tires, nickel-trimmed radiator, nickel-plated bumpers, automatic windshield wiper, rear view mirror, scuff plates, cowl lights and motometer with lock. A special body stripe is also provided.

Manufacturing and buying these accessories in quantity, Dodge Brothers are naturally able to install them at prices considerably below what the owner would have to pay at retail. The public was quick to sense this and the demand for the special types grew steadily from the moment they were made available. Their convenience and appearance has elicited the greatest admiration everywhere and those who know the volume that has been attained can readily understand how Dodge Brothers were able to make a reduction when other were announcing advances.

Four Dodge Brothers cars are affected by the reduction—the special touring car, special roadster, special "A" sedan, and special four-passenger coupe. The "B" sedan and the business coupe have also been added to the line of special types.

As the reduction was made possible by economies effected in the purchase of equipment used exclusively on the special type cars, the standard types are in no way affected, according to local dealers. The prices of all standard types remain unchanged.

How to Buy a Used Car!

What Is a Used Car?

Any car which has passed from the hands of the Motor Car dealer into the hands of the owner is a used car, regardless of the lapse of time. It may be the veriest junk or it may be a beautiful creation which has been run from the dealer's showroom to the owner's garage. Every car you see on the street is a used car.

Does a Used Car Represent Real Value?

Ordinarily speaking, yes. In many cases a USED CAR represents a better value than a new car of a lower price class, for the reason that depreciation has been figured out of the total cost and you pay for the actual merchandise. The determining factor should be the answer to the question: Why is it offered for sale as a used car?

What Is Your Protection in Buying a Used Car?

Only the reputation of the dealer from whom you buy it. If the dealer is willing and ready to tell you truthfully the facts, to show you records and cost sheets, to consider the sale of a USED CAR as vitally affecting the future of his business, then your USED CAR purchase will be satisfactory, in every respect, as if you were buying the latest model in his line.

In Buying a Used Car You Are Entitled to Know!

1. The name and address of the previous owner.
2. The service to which the car has been subjected.
3. The approximate mileage it has gone.
4. The amount, nature and cost of reconditioning.
5. The reason the car is offered for sale as a used car.

THE REPUTABLE DEALER

Takes in trade only those cars which can be resold at a fair valuation. "He is not a gambler and he is not a horse trader." He considers the used car a piece of merchandise which must be sold fairly and priced correctly. He has the car reconditioned in an efficient manner, at the lowest cost, after a careful examination by experts. He is glad to have you know the entire history of the car so you may competently judge the fairness of the price. For he fixes the price according to the true value and merchandises them according to business lines.

LEGITIMATE MERCHANDISING SALES

STEADY GAIN NOTED IN VOLUME OF STEEL BUSINESS

Healthy Trade Revival In Other Lines Expected

BY C. H. PLATT.

New York, September 27.—(Special to The Constitution.)—The stock market showed a much better tone in the last week, and while there were some brief periods of reaction, the rallies were of more vigor and showed that there is some important buying for big interests going on. The public has been taking a fair part in the trading and it looks very much as if this will increase in the near future. It is normal for there to be a large amount of public trading at this season of the year, and it is also usual for the stock market to advance during the month of October. There are several special reasons for expecting strength in the next month, of which the most pronounced is the preparations for the German loan. There seems to be every reason to expect that loan to be a great success, but it is necessary for there to be a strong market in securities at the time and prior to its flotation. The business news continues quite favorable.

A steady gain in the volume of steel business is reported, and that is a barometer of other trades which almost always run into a revival when there is a picking up in the steel business. There have been larger orders placed in the past week or two for cars in the motor field and cars and locomotives in railroad equipment, and a real revival seems to be going on in rubber goods. The feature of the market in the past week was the general advance in public utility stocks, many of them making new highs for the year. The demand for utilities is based, in part, on the fact that many of these sticks that are now on a secure dividend basis have been selling to give a very good yield on the investment. There are others in this group that are due for dividend increases.

Earnings Good.

As a whole, there has been very good earnings by gas and electric companies, and also by telephone, telegraph, power, and some traction companies. The placing of investment funds is also going on in many other seasoned stocks, and that brought about some advances in the best of the dividend tobacco stocks and some other industrials, while the dividend rails showed a higher tendency on investment buying. With call loans at 2 per cent and time money available for short periods at 3 per cent and at under 4 per cent for fairly long periods, it is obvious that there will be a lot of money taken out of the general loaning market and put into bonds and stocks that are safe and give a return of 6 per cent and higher, while many that sell to yield 5 1-2 per cent or a little under that are being bought by people who are taking their funds out of the general loaning market. The professional traders have been running the stock market for some time, but they did not succeed in stopping the recent rising trend, even though heavy short selling took place several times in the past two weeks. This selling was concentrated in the stocks that usually lead the market's fluctuations and it also appeared in a number of specialties in which people are operating. The interests back of the market let this selling take its course, but any time it threatened to unsettle the rest of the list, these big interest supported the market. Therefore, they found it very easy to force the shorts to cover when the time for the market to rally was due. The public has been watching these developments and has taken an increasing part in the trading when it became very apparent that the rallies were more important than the reactions. There is no certainly as yet that the major advance has been resumed, but the market looks very much that way.

Rail Stocks Up.

Besides the business improvement that is going on, there is no change in the outlook for the reelection of President Coolidge, and that seems to be very much wanted by the leading financial and market interests. The railroad stocks have been showing a rising trend in the past week and this is expected to be carried further in the near future. It is expected that a number of other mergers will be worked out in the next two or three months and this makes it possible for almost any stock to have a big rise. Some of the lowest-price issues that have no prospects for much of an advance just from their earnings position may be taken up in an important way before long if there are prospects for these to be included in any of the mergers. The oil industry is looking better and there are prospects that the moderate advance in leading oil shares that has been developing will continue. Railroad equipment stocks appear to be in an especially attractive position because of their high investment standing and good yields in many cases, also because of the larger buying of cars and locomotives that has been taking place.

Money market conditions indicate that there is little likelihood of a rise in loaning rates for at least six months ahead and possibly not in the next year. This is due to the increasing amounts of loanable funds that have been coming into the market. Offsetting this trend, however, is the indication that a moderate inflation is starting. There are prospects, though, that the big banks and the federal reserve banks will keep this tendency to inflation in check for a long time.

Foreign exchange moved in an irregular way, reflecting the political crisis in Great Britain, with prospects for a general election there. The real situation in exchange continues good and there is every indication that this market will resume its higher trend before long, as the Dawes plan is being put into operation and this should bring about more stable financial and industrial conditions abroad.

Bond Market Steady.

The bond market has been quiet and steady. The low money rates and the placement of funds in investments offset the small selling wave that has been going on. This has been due to the liquidation of unsold bonds in the hands of securities dealers, in some cases, who are thereby getting their position into shape for the German loan. There is also a disposition on the part of many prospective buyers of bonds to hold off until there is a better line on the German issue. When that is out of the way a resumption of strength and activity in the general bond market is to be expected.

Conditions is about twenty leading trades are reported to be better now than at any time since early in the year. The industrial slump that started last March and become rather severe by the middle of June was due more than anything else to the fears of political unsettlement. There was no fundamental disturbance to produce this decline in general business, and therefore it was easy to stop the decline and bring about a resumption of confidence in general business when the political uneasiness had passed. There had been fears that radical candidates might be elected, but there seems to be less chance for this every day as the swing of political sentiment appears to be going back to more conservative candidates.

The sale of New York state bonds at a price to yield the syndicate buying them a little under 3.65 per cent and their resale at a figure to yield even less on the investment is an indication that money is going to continue cheap for a long time and also that bonds and high-grade investment stocks ought to advance. There are prospects that a lot of new financing will come out after the German bonds have been sold in order to take advantage of this excellent investment market.

Labor conditions are somewhat better, with larger employment reported in several leading industrial centers. There is also every indication that no important strikes will develop for some time to come, and in many ways the labor situation is healthier now than it has been in years.

The loss of oil in Mexico due to strikes there, floods and other causes has cut down the total supply available for use in this country to below present consumption. There has been a particularly heavy withdrawal of fuel oil from storage in some districts. The oil industry as a whole is in a position to respond to any good news with a higher level of oil prices, while oil stocks appear to be due for a moderate advance in the near future and much higher prices before next spring. By that time it is expected that there will be a really strong condition in the oil industry.

Copper Prices Firm.

Copper prices have been somewhat firmer and there are prospects that a moderate advance in the metal will develop in the next week or two. The world demand for copper is growing and there is no question that the industry is going to have a long period of prosperity.

Steel prices were disturbed and ordering interrupted by the putting into effect of new schedules of quotations in place of the "Pittsburg plus" plan of prices. There is every indication, however, that a larger volume of steel business will be placed in the near future and it is expected that the trade will continue to improve, also that prices will be stabilized in the next week or two.

Cotton rallied very sharply after the government report indicating a crop of not much over 12,500,000 bales. There is every indication that this will be further scaled down, as the late crop is not in the best condition and in many sections there is little "top crop." The outlook for prices for cotton indicates a further advance will develop before long.

News, Views And Reviews

Stock Letters.

FENNER & BEANE.

New York, September 27.—The principal news developments were a 10 to 15c cut in mid-continent crude by Prairie Oil and Gas and Gulf Oil, and announcement from semi-official quarters that S. T. U. had entirely liquidated its bank loans which only a few months ago amounted to about $6,000,000. So far as the market itself was concerned, the undertone was fairly strong and numerous advances took place in industrial stocks.

An announcement was made to the effect that the American Woolen company has withdrawn from sale all woolen goods in its women's wear line as the entire production for spring season has already been sold. The closing tone was somewhat irregular owing to desire on the part of speculative interests to even up trading commitments over the week end, although United States Steel closed 1¼ points up for the day at 109¼.

LIVINGSTON & CO.

New York, September 27.—The stock market continues to be marked by strength in some of the rails and a series of moves in individual stocks. The leading stocks in the meantime hesitate. We believe, however, that they will go higher if for no other reason than to aid in the distribution of the pool stocks. Still think stocks are a purchase on setbacks.

Cotton Letters.

C. P. ELLIS & CO.

New Orleans, September 27.—Unless killing frost materializes, which is exeremely doubtful at this early date, we are inclined to feel that the market is high enough for the present, or until it is demonstrated that the trade are willing to meet the recent heavy advance.

POST & FLAGG.

New York, September 27.—In spite of strong cables and reports of continued unfavorable weather in the belt the market falled in the first part of the session to respond and quotations worked off on rather heavy week-end profit-taking and and hedge sales. The market, however, at no time was weak and met with a good demand on a scale down. The October premium eased off somewhat on sales believed to be against intended shipments of cotton here. During the last hour heavy buying appeared from spot house and New Orleans brokers on the reports of freezing weather in the west and the prospects of an unfavorable week-end throughout the belt. Many local brokers were caught on the short side; hasty covering of contracts forced price to new high levels.

FENNER & BEANE.

New Orleans, September 27.—We dompt if crop ideas have yet been revised downward sufficiently but the advance has been so rapid that a good sized reaction is likely to occur before we go higher, especially if damaging frost fail to materialize.

LIVINGSTON & CO.

New York, September 27.—Bullish sentiment is expanding and it looks as if the force of the buying movement will carry prices higher. Reactions are to be expected but we believe cotton a purchase on all moderate recessions.

R. R. DUGGAN & CO.

New York, September 26.—Our readers will recall that we expressed the opinion that the huge crop estimators were in for a rude awakening. The last government report has made some estimates almost ridiculous. We wish to say, however, right here and now, that we do not expect an abnormally small crop, and we still hold to the idea that the crop is in the neighborhood of 12,000,000 bales. We have based our ideas in the recent past on this theory and we still adhere to these views.

We must point out, however, that the market has had a material advance and much cotton will be sold in the south at 25 cents, in fact, we advise our farmer friends to sell at least half of their crop at 25 cents or even a little lower. However, we believe that those believing in extremely low prices have had their lesson and it is our idea that the farmer will market his crop at a fair and equitable price for cotton.

HUBBARD BROS. & CO

New York, September 27.—Very heavy profit-taking took place practically during the entire session this morning. It is quite natural after such an advance as we have had since the issuance of the government report that a great many people who had long cotton were anxious to take profits, and also it is unquestionably true that people who were anxious to hedge before, but have refrained, took advantage of the high point on which to put out their hedges; so between the profit-taking and the hedge selling it is quite natural for the market to ease off this morning. There are some predictions of frosts in the western belt but whether they will materialise it is hard to say. The weather in the eastern belt is not favorable and unless there is a decided improvement over the week-end we would not be at all surprised to see prices advance further. Liverpool futures are due on Monday: October, 14.04; December, 13.88.

ORVIS BROS. & CO.

New York, September 27.—With the last government report indicating a sharp falling off in the prospective yield sentiment and trade demand once again appreciated the cheapness of cotton, and buying orders crowded the market with highest prices of the movement resulting today. This leaves prices at the pivotal point of 25c, since the government weather report has been such as to greatly lower the grade and further destroy cotton as reported by rotting in the bolls and seed sprouting in bolls. Furthermore, during recent weeks, spinners saw a margin between cotton and cloth. The next major move from this level is debatable, but with prospects of a reduced yield, a loosened quantity of high-grade cotton mills throughout the world saving only a very small amount of cotton on hand; money being cheap and the economic situation in Europe improved, it would appear from this outlook that prices will advance further and any period of easiness should be accepted as desirable for making purchases. Liverpool, due Monday: October, 14.63; January, 14.44.

H. & B. BEER.

New Orleans, September 27.—A. V. Curran & Co., correspondents: Indications are for clearing weather for the western half of belt, especially for northern portion where it will be colder with the probability of light frost tonight, but there is not much danger of killing frost, and it will likely be fair and warmer in the west belt by Monday, probably clearing and cooler east of the Mississippi river. Under the circumstances we think market high enough for present as in event of better weather next week, market likely ease off again.

New York, September 27.—Trading in today's brief session of the bond market ended with prices holding around the highest levels of the week. Scattered profit taking at the close reduced earlier gains of several high grade railroad and industrial issues, but the general list displayed a firm tone with greater activity in foreign obligations.

Indications that the German loan would be put in shape for offering at an early date brought a revival of interest in virtually all European issues. United Kingdom 5 1-2s of 1937 and Swiss 5 1-2s achieved new high prices for the year and a broadened inquiry embraced Austrian 7s, Belgian 8s and Netherlands 6s. South American bonds, however, yielded to the pressure of realizing sales.

Frisco income 6s were among the most active of the railroad mortgages, scoring a gain of more than 10 points in anticipation of inauguration of dividends on the road's preferred stock next week. Heavy spots included St. Paul and International Great Northern Railroad Liens, Wickwire Spencer Steel 7s and U. S. Rubber 7 1-2s, Willys Overland 6 1-2s, one of the few motor company bonds, touched par for the first time this year in response to the rise in motor shares.

United States government bonds moved irregularly lower.

Cotton Goods Review.

New York, September 27.—Cotton goods trading for the longer future has not yet attained the volume that is customary in the fall of the year, due in large part to uncertainty about raw cotton values. A sharp rise followed the issuance of the government condition report this week and it was followed by a hasty upward revision of cloth and yarn prices by mills.

Advances in cloths ranged from 1-4 cent to 3-8 cent a yard with the average of 1-4 cent maintained. Yarn prices were advanced one cent and two cents a pound in the trading markets and from two cents to four cents a pound by spinners. Buying has reached a point that has encouraged many mills to expand operations. In the southern field it is estimated that ninety per cent capacity is now being operated but in other sections there are still many idle spindles and looms.

Trading this week was better in sheetings of a heavy character. Some colored goods have been reduced. Wide sheetings of the more popular makes are comfortably under order. Delay is being encountreed in naming spring prices on ginghams. Percales are in light call. A steady business has been done on broad cloths, voiles, sateens and some other fine yarn goods. Silk and cotton and rayon and cotton mixtures have sold well. Spring orders for underwear and wash fabrics are below normal while the spot demand for heavy underwear and hosiery has shown improvement.

There has been better trading of late in automobile fabrics. Prices current in primary channels are as follows: Print cloths, 28 inch, 64x 64's, 7 1-4 cents; 64x60's, 7 cents; 38 1-2 inch, 64x64's, 9 1-4 cents; brown sheetings, southern standards, 15 1-2 cents; denims, 2.20's, 20 cents; tickings, 24 1-2 cents and 26 cents; staple ginghams, wide fifteen cents, nominal; dress ginghams, 18 1-2 cents and 21 cents, nominal; prints, 10 cents.

The Investor

BY PAUL WILLARD GARRETT

Income Bonds Do Not Sell on An Accrued Interest Basis, But Sell "Flat" Like Stocks—Six Leading Income Issues Will Go Ex-interest October 1.

The approach of October 1 always calls attention afresh to our interesting, even if somewhat limited, list of income bonds. The income obligations listed on the New York stock exchange do not number more than about a dozen, all told, and only eight of them are active.

Particular attention usually is paid to these issues as April 1 or October 1 draws near, because it is then that most of the eight receive interest payments. In the purchase of ordinary bonds the investor frequently does not note the dates on which interest is paid. The thing is not so important, because bonds generally are traded in on an accrued interest basis. The listed price in such cases represents simply the amount asked for the bond itself; not, as in the case of stocks, the amount asked for the bond itself plus whatever accruals there may be on account of interest payments soon to be made.

Interest on most income bonds is payable only as earned and as declared by the board of directors, and that is why interest accruals are included in the price of the bond. Income bonds sell off immediately after interest dates by the amounts of the payment.

Are an Ingenious Obligation.

Income bonds represent an ingenious type of obligation. They possess features both of ordinary bonds and of stocks, but are more like bonds than stocks. Reorganization managers find income bonds suitable for distribution to old security holders who deserve something better than stock. The managers can hold down a company's fixed charges by the creation of income bonds and at the same time give holders of old securities an issue that will work into a good investment position as earnings improve.

It is not strictly correct to say that interest on income bonds is payable only as earned and as declared by the board of directors. The matter is not always left entirely to the discretion of the board. In the more modern instruments clauses are inserted that require the directors to declare interest when earnings reach a certain level. Some income bonds are entitled to cumulative interest at a given rate. Some receive interest at a given rate. Some receive interest semi-annually and others only once a year.

A Word About Each of the Eight.

The New Orleans, Texas & Mexico railway's non-cumulative 5 per cent income bonds of 1935 are high-class and are improving rapidly. The amount of mortgage bonds ahead of them is relatively small and the company is a good earner. The bonds now sell around 92; they go ex-interest 2 1-2 points on October 1.

The St. Louis-San Francisco Railway company's list contains two rather popular income bonds—the adjustment mortgage 6s, due in 1955, and the income mortgage 6s, due in 1960. The adjustment mortgage 6s are cumulative and receive interest only once a year, October 1. Thus the income mortgage 6s are junior to the adjustment mortgage 6s, are non-cumulative and receive interest only once a year, October 1. Thus the adjustments will go ex-interest 3 points on October 1 and the incomes 6 points.

The Missouri-Kansas-Texas Railroad company's adjustment mortgage 5s, due in 1967, become cumulative on January 1, 1925, and are convertible into preferred stock until 1932. These bonds sell ex-interest 2 1-2 points on October 1.

The Hudson & Manhattan railroad adjustment income 5s of 1957 and the Third Avenue railroad adjustment 5s each lose 2 1-2 points on October 1. In the case of the Third Avenue railraod adjustment bonds a large accumulation of interest remains unpaid, although regular interest payments are being met.

There are two prominent income bonds that will not receive interest next Wednesday, October 1—the International-Great Northern railroad adjustment 6s, which receive interest once a year, April 1, and the Seaboard Air Line railway adjustment 5s, which receive payments February 1 and August 1.

May	25.30	25.52	24.95	24.95-25	25.37

New York, September 27.—The cotton market today was extremely nervous and irregular, following Friday's big advances. After selling off to 24.62 in the early trading, December advanced to 25.13, a new high record for the movement, but later broke to 24.45 and closed at 24.50, the general market closing weak at a net decline of 34 to 42 points.

The market opened steady at unchanged prices to a decline of 10 points. Weakness developed under hedge selling, week-end realizing and selling on the expectation of reaction after yesterday's rapid advance. The failure of early weather news to contain any mention of frost in the southwest probably disappointed some of yesterday's buyers. A great many contracts, however, were taken out of the market on the decline to 25.50 for October and 24.69 for January, or about 20 to 25 points below yesterday's closing quotations. This evidently strenghtened the technical position of the market and when early sellers attempted to cover on reports of continued rains and predictions for still colder weather in the southwest, contracts appeared to be comparatively scarce.

October sold up to 25.98 and January to 25.16, making net advances of 23 to 29 points. The official weather belt forecast was for frost in northwest Arkansas, Oklahoma and Texas, but the new high prices attraced renewal of heavy realizing and the late market was unsettled by the relatively easy ruling of October, accompanied by rumors of selling aginst intended shipments here for delivery and of realizing by some of the largest holders of contracts.

October broke to 25.20 and January to 26.50 in the late trading, making net declines of about 36 to 35 points on the active positions. The opinion among most local traders appeared to be that it was too early in the season for anything like killing temperatures in the south, but it seemed that the day's weather news as a whole had tended to strengthen expectations of a futher reduction in estimates of the crop.

Cotton and shipboard awaiting clearance was estimated at 103,000 bales, against 127,000 last year.

WIDE CHANGES AT NEW ORLEANS.

New Orleans, September 27.—The cotton market was very active today for a short Saturday session and prices fluctuated within a wide range. October reached 25.00 at the start for the first time on the present upward movement, but closed at 24.41, the low price of the day, showing a spread of 59 points. December, the most active trading month, after advancing to 25.06 declined to 24.39, a spread of 67 points. That month at the highest was 35 points above the previous close and at the lowest 32 points below. The net decline for the day on other months were 31 to 35 points.

At the start the market was 24 points up owing to favorable Liverpool cables, but prices soon eased off on week-end realizing, losing 50 to 55 points. When the weather map was posted showing more rains in the eastern belt, general cloudiness in the belt as a whole, and light to heavy frost in the far northwest, the market rallied and the advance was accelerated by a forecast predicting unsettled weather in the belt over Sunday and frost in the northern part of the western belt. This bulge carried prices up 54 to 61 points from the earlier lows. In the last few minutes of trading the market broke badly on heavy liquidation by longs and active short selling and new lows for the day were established right at the close, December trading at 24.39.

Cables reported the firmness in Liverpool as due to shorts covering on unfavorable weather reports from the south. While the local market made a fair response to the firmness of Liverpool, New York ignored it and showed weakness from the start. Aside from the weather there was little market news except that Fall River reported an increasing demand for print cloths and the yarn markets were higher with an urgent demand for goods for immediate delivery.

Beginning Monday the New Orleans market will open at 9 o'clock a. m., and close at 2 p. m.

WHEAT GAINS LOST ON PROFIT-TAKING

Chicago, September 27.—Immense export business in wheat, together with fear that the crop was in imminent danger of big damage by frost, whirled grain prices upward today, but lively profit-taking wiped out the wheat gains. On the advance, all deliveries of wheat and of rye outdid the season's previous top price record. Wheat closed easy at 3-4 cent net decline to 1-8 cent rise, December 1.38 1-2 to 1.38 5-8 and May 1.41 to 1.44 1-8, with corn 3 1-4 to 4 5-8 cents up, oats showing 1-2 cent to 3-4@7-8 cent advance, and provisions unchanged to 17 cents higher.

It was estimated that export purchasing of wheat amounted to 3,000,000 bushels. In addition, foreign buying of future deliveries of wheat were of considerable magnitude. Meanwhile, reports were current that the rye crop in Germany was so meager the German import requirements would exceed the total crop of rye in the United States and that quantities of wheat would have to be bought instead of rye. Complaints were also at hand telling of wheat crop damage and harvest delay in Great Britain and other European countries.

Beneficial rains in Argentina and India tended on the other hand to dispel somewhat the anxiety of wheat buyers, and to bring about realizing sales on the part of holders able to collect a profit. Prospects of more favorable weather in Canada than has been the rule of late, counted likewise toward effecting a setback in the final dealings.

Corn prices were buoyant from start to finish. At times the corn market was even more active than wheat. Nervousness concerning frost was due to general belief that a killing frost at this time would be disastrous to corn not fully matured. Oats sympathized with corn.

Provisions were influenced both by hogs and grain.

FENNER & BEANE.

Chicago, Ill., September 27.—WHEAT: There was influential buying that advanced prices sharply. Locals followed and got overbought, in evening up at the last they caused a reaction. The tone was strong. Winnipeg also showing a strong tone due in part to continued unsettled and much colder weather in the Canadian northwest. Foreign crop news continued bullish. September, December and May wheat reached new high levels on the crop. Seaboard advices state that foreigners are taking everything offered.

CORN: Offerings light, while there was buying by leading commission houses. After substantial advances were recorded, there was profit-taking but the market as a whole did not meet with impressive selling.

OATS: Important commission houses bought while the market met with little resistance aside from that which came from longs accepting profits. Weather favorable but country offerings to arrive light.

RYE: There was good buying by houses with seaboard and foreign connection while selling was limited to resting orders met on the way up. Foreign news bullish.

PROVISIONS: Firmer with buying credited to outside speculators and leading local packing interests. Hogs: Receipts, 1,500; market steady to 10c up; top, $10.00.

WEEKLY GRAIN MARKET REVIEW

Chicago, September 27.—New top record prices for the season have been reached by both wheat and rye this week in connection with European buying on a big scale. Compared with a week ago, wheat this morning was 1 3-4c to 5c higher, whereas corn was 3-4c to 5 1-2c down and oats 1-8c to 2 1-4c off.

In the provisions market lard was 45c to 67c up, with meats varying from 20c decline to 15c gain.

Persistent wet, cold weather in Canada delaying the wheat crop movement there and damaging the quality of grain appeared to be a factor of much importance in bringing about enlarged European demand for bread stuffs. Usually at this time of the year wheat prices in Canada are depressed by large receipts, but for at least the time being the current arrivals at Winnipeg appeared to be reduced to about half of the 1923 total. Meanwhile stormy weather in Europe adding to previous transatlantic crop damage gave evident emphasis to the movement toward getting increased supplies from the United States.

Among the reports which attracted special notice was an assertion that the wheat crop of Italy this year would be but little more than half of the 1923 production and that the increased requirements of France would alone equal the entire surplus looked for from Australia.

Corn prices rallied only in part from recent severe declines based on widespread opinion that absence of frost together with better weather steadily enlarged the probable yield of merchantable corn. The rallies were for the most part due to official reports that nevertheless the corn crop taken on the whole is relatively even more backward than a month ago.

Oats were governed principally by the action of corn values.

In provisions the outstanding influence was the rapid reduction of lard.

BUTTER REVIEW

Chicago, September 27.—Heavy supplies and liberal offerings of fine butter caused declines in the butter markets during the week. Trading was sluggish and the lower grades moved with difficulty.

Sentiment favored lower prices in the belief that cheaper butter for the consumer would improve consumption. Operators were of the opinion that in order to move the large stocks in storage there must be a considerable increase or improvement in both export and domestic demand or a decided decrease in production.

Conditions throughout producing sections were reported exceptionally good for this season and promised a continued heavy production. Later in the season, high feed prices may have some effect on the market.

Withdrawals in New York for export decreased storage holdings, but the amounts removed were not sufficiently large to improve the situation.

Closing prices and range 92-score butter at the principal markets follows: Chicago, 1 3-4 less at 35 1-4; New York, 1-4 less at 37 1-4; Boston, 1-2 less at 37 1-2 and Philadelphia, 1-4 less at 38 1-4.

The Day in Finance

The Criticism That is Directed to Financial Houses—Some of It Justified Leading Bankers Admit—Striking Cases.

New York, September 27.—In the three and a half years to June 30, 1924, no less than $17,000,000,000 securities have been sold to the American public by members of the Investment Bankers' association, John W. Prentis, president of that association, stated at this week's thirteenth annual convention, held at Cleveland. A detailed report was submitted by Mr. Prentis showing exactly how this total of $17,000,000,000 included over $900,000,000 farm loan securities, $1,200,000,000 securities of foreign governments, $4,000,000,000 municipal, states and county bonds, and $11,000,000,000 securities of railroads, public utilities and industrial corporations; how the figures were divided into a total of $4,203,793,000 for 1921, $5,244,862,000 for 1922, $4,986,474,000 for 1923 and $3,215,430,000 for the first half of 1924 or at the rate of $6,000,000,000 for this year compared with the $4,203,000,000 for 1921.

All of the speakers told of the rapid growth of the number of our individual investors and Dwight W. Morrow, a member of the firm of J. P. Morgan & Co., told in particular how it was unnecessary to exaggerate the importance of the small individual investor because it was only necessary to state the facts to show the important part played by the small man and woman investor in all important offerings of new securities. Mr. Morrow cited figures to show what a large part had been played in recent specific important bond offerings by investors with $1,000 and even with only from $400 to $100 adding:

Financial Houses Criticised.

"If we fail to keep in mind the sacrifice that the investor is making of his today for the benefit of his tomorrow, we shall fail entirely in our function. A great deal of criticism is directed to financial houses. Some of it may be justified. Much of it certainly is unjustified. The one thing, however, that should sustain an investment banker in the important function that he performs for society is the confidence that the investors have in him. It is one thing to be confident of another man when you are dealing with your own money, and it is another thing to be confident of him when you are dealing with somebody else's money. The one thing it seems to me that all investment houses, which are dealing with clients, who have saved money, should feel very great gratification in, is that their success depends upon the confidence of the people."

Every once in so often the Rockefeller foundation has published a list of the securities which were given by John D. Rockefeller upon which the foundations depend for its income, for the work it is doing throughout the world. From time to time this list of investments shows that even a man with John D.'s rare ability gets "stung." There are many unforeseen things which can happen even to a man like John D. to make an investment which appeared good at the time it was made turn out bad or worse than bad. Hence, it is true, as Mr. Morrow says, that much of the unfriendly criticism directed against financial houses certainly is unjustified.

Mr. Morrow admits, however, that "some of it may be justified." He could have left out the "may" without straining the truth.

Your correspondent has before him two letters of distress written by a widow living just outside of Philadelphia. She states that in June of 1922 a representative of a Philadelphia house with an office at 120 Broadway, New York, advertising itself as "investment bankers," advised her to sell four French government bonds, saying that these bonds were unsafe. Taking his advice she sold the bonds at a loss and again taking his advice she used the money thus obtained to buy first two $1,000 bonds of the Mt. Royal hotel, and the balance in the preferred stock of the Estey-Welte company, which manufactures organs and pianos. She points out that the French government bonds have since advanced above 100; that she was told by the representative of the investment house in question to convert her Mt. Royal hotel bonds into preferred stock; that shortly afterwards the dividends on this preferred stock were passed; that neither the hotel nor the piano company stock, she found after buying, is listed on the New York stock exchange; that seeing an advertisement of a stock firm offering to buy Mt. Royal stock she found the best price offered was 47, adding "while I paid $100 for my good French bonds."

The Charges.

Here are the charges which can fairly be brought against the representative of the so-called "investment bankers." He advised a woman who is a widow, dependent upon her investments, for an income, to sell French government 8 per cent bonds of 1945, payable in dollars in New York, on the ground that such

An extra dividend of 3 per cent has been declared on the common stock of the Packard Motor Car company in addition to the regular quarterly dividend of 3 per cent, both payable October 31 to stock of record October 15.

Railroad equipment manufacturers had good business this month, bookings to September 27 aggregating 22,845 freight cars, 250 passenger cars and 115 locomotives, Railway Age says. This was a heavy increase over the same month in 1923. Orders for 103,443 freight cars, 1,405 passenger cars and 1,005 locomotives were received in the nine months this year against 71,876 freight, 1,483 passenger cars and 1,836 locomotives a year ago.

Dividends of $12 a share received by the Reynolds Spring company from its holding of 6,438 shares of General Leather company stock are expected to assure declaration of its own quarterly dividend in October, according to a statement by Wiley Reynolds, president of the company.

Sales of the Jewel Tea company in the first thirty-six weeks of 1924 increased to $9,242,069, compared with $8,459,252 in the corresponding period last year.

Plans under consideration by the New York Stock exchange to tighten its supervision of member firms involve the formation of an auditing department which would have full power to examine the books of exchange houses and determine their financial condition.

Aggregate net operating income of the first thirty railroads to report earnings for August amounted to $41,200,000 compared with $44,370,000 in August, 1923, a decrease of 9.20 per cent. Gross revenues were $214,141,000 against $246,171,000, a decrease of 8.9 per cent.

Prairie Oil and Gas company has reduced prices of crude oil in Kansas, Oklahoma and Texas 10 to 15 cents a barrel.

Earth Shocks Felt.

Swansea, Wales, September 27.—An earthquake shock was felt in the Rhymney valley early this morning. It was felt pronouncedly in some of the coal mines where ominous rumblings followed by loud reports and the falling of roofs spread alarm among the miners who thought an explosion had occurred.

TIN CONTINUES MARKET FEATURE

New York, September 27.—(Special to The Constitution.)—Further violent fluctuations in tin, rumored to be in sympathy with efforts of two powerful financial groups in London to gain controy, featured the metals market in the week just closing, Engineering and Fining Journal-Press reports. Speculation in the London market brought the price down from 47 5-8 cents to 45 5-8 cents in three days, but brought it back again yesterday to 47 1-4 cents. Silver again established a new high mark for the present continued upward movement, reaching 69 7-8 cents.

COPPER.

Sales of copper were light through the week in an unusually quiet market. More metal was sold to consumers abroad than to domestic buyers. The price generally obtained was 13 cents, delivreed, but there was some shading of this price, a moderate quantity going at 12.90 cents. Usual unwillingness of buyers to participate in a declining market is one reason for quietness in trading. Copper is reported offered abroad at 13.10 cents c.i.f. The London market has kept fairly steady. Copper representatives returning from abroad are optimistic over prospects for increased buying.

LEAD.

The lead market continued quiet, the condition which has prevailed for several weeks continuing. Slight premiums have been obtained through the week in occasional instances over the New York price of 8 cents, but most of the metal was sold at that level. September shipment is still in demand, but the bulk of the sales made were for October delivery. In St. Louis, lead was sold all week at 7.825 and 7.85 cents. The trend of the market at present is uncertain.

ZINC.

Sales of prime western zinc have been fair through the week, but at prices that decreased almost daily. The market was 6.15 cents in East St. Louis last Thursday but declined to 6.10 cents yesterday. Galvanizers have been the chief purchasers. They are reported to be operating at 50 per cent of capacity, which shows a pronounced improvement over conditions a few months ago. Part of the improvement now is ascribed to effort to rush work on existing contracts to avoid cancellations. New business is poor in amount. High grade market remains at 8 and 8 1-4 cents, delivered.

WEEKLY LUMBER MARKET REVIEW

Chicago, September 27.—The lumber trade slowed down perceptibly during September, but the volume is satisfactory to most producers, and the outlook is judged favorable. The consensus within the industry is that no great activity can be expected during the rest of the year, but that the present volume of trade will probably be maintained until weather conditions definitely interfere with outdoor work. This expectation is based on prospects for an increased farm demand during the next two months, which should outbalance the decline in city consumption already noted, says The Amerian Lumberman, Chicago. Present weather conditions have been favorable to the corn crop in most sections of the belt, and it is felt that, if reasonably warm temperatures continue for another three weeks, this crop will turn out considerably better than has been counted on. In this case sentiment among the agricultural population of important consuming sections would be infinitely improved and would be a forceful stimulus to the lumber trade.

The southern pine market meanwhile is being supported by a strong demand for construction items from practically the entire south and the southern half of the middle west. Bookings continue to run slightly in excess of output, and the lack of stock at the mills prevents any pressure of consequence for new business. The only disturbing element is the large number of transit cars being put afield by wholesalers following speculative purchases made some time ago. Prices for mill shipment are well maintained, and no early material weakening in these is looked for. There has lately been a number of orders for railroad and car material, but these have not helped the market appreciably, nor are many more in prospect.

The Douglas fir situation is virtually unchanged. Orders still exceed production by a fair margin, and the shortage of several popular items is acute. Prices are being firmly maintained at their recent high levels. Some attractive car material orders have been placed during the last fortnight, and a limited volume of business of this character remains in prospect. Exports are steady at about normal, Japan buying on a fair scale, but conservatively. The California market is improving, but the Atlantic seaboard is demoralized on account of the heavy consignment of cargo shipments received there during the summer. The rail market is good and holds out promise for October and November.

Hardwood trade is well maintained, but it is evident that the market for the southern species is showing a slight weakness, due to seasonal plus political causes. Northern hardwoods, on the other hand, remain strong, with lower grades showing an upward tendency as a result of a good demand for material of that description and low stocks.

GENERAL TRADE---Merchants and Manufacturers---GENERAL TRADE

CARHARTT KNOWN FOR HIS LIBERAL POLICY

Hamilton Carhartt, founder of the Carhartt Overall factories and cotton mills, has long been known for his friendly attitude toward organized labor, it having been his policy to always provide pleasant working environment for his employees, and to encourage a spirit of loyalty by seeing that each man and woman in his employ was amply rewarded for their services in producing Carhartt overalls.

This policy is rigidly enforced by E. R. Partridge, manager of the Atlanta unit of the Carhartt factories, and nowhere in the city can be found a manufacturing plant where a better spirit of fellowship prevails among employees, or a greater determination to approach 100 per cent efficiency in production.

Mr. Carhartt was a visitor in Atlanta a few weeks ago and was the guest of honor at a dinner given by Mr. Partridge at the Biltmore hotel. In the response to the rousing welcome given this progressive manufacturer, Mr. Carhartt briefly outlined his policy as follows:

"My ambition is to run The Carhartt company successfully and to give a great many young men a chance to make their way in the world. My associates in the business are my closest friends, my chums. If it weren't for the fun there is in working with them and being with them—I wouldn't—I couldn't stay in business. Without sentiment, the work would be too hard.

"Why, I run my business on sentiment. If I didn't, it would not be successful—and it wouldn't be worth running. What is it that makes an organization successful? Isn't it the loyalty and the enthusiasm if the many men engaged in it? And how can any man inspire these sentiments if he has no sentiment in his own make-up? No one man can run a big concern; he must depend upon others for the actual doing of almost everything.

"To get the right kind of men we begin early. We are more particular about the hiring of the office boys than any other thing connected with the Carhartt company, for the office boys of today will become our department managers tomorrow. We select them with that in view. We practically never go outside for a high-priced man. Just as the fellow who starts with the Pennsylvania railroad as a brakeman may one day become president, so young men who start with us at the bottom can hope to rise to the top."

THORNTON ENJOYING SPLENDID PATRONAGE

According to A. L. Thornton, proprietor of Thornton's cafeteria at Luckie and Forsyth streets, his place has shown a splendid growth in popularity as an eating place for business people during the last month. "Thornton's," recently renovated, operates a cafe upstairs and a cafeteria in the basement, enabling patrons to get whichever service they prefer.

Mr. Thornton will make a specialty of sea food this fall and winter, having completed arrangements to get fish, oysters, etc., direct from the waterfront.

"We are going to give our patrons during the coming months the most delicious sea food they have ever tasted, except right at coast restaurants. People who like sea food," says Mr. Thornton, "will find a menu here that satisfies the most discriminating appetites."

MONEY AT WORK

Brief But Important Lessons in Finance, Markets, Stocks, Bonds and Investments.

Your problems are the same as the problems of other merchants. Some have been solved and the results published. Some are now being worked on.

The government, trade organizations and research bureaus of various schools have a wealth of information on store management and operation. This information is usually free for the asking, yet it is distributed to only a small percentage of the people whom it would benefit.

The alert manager makes it his business to know about all the information on his type of business. Some of the problems which he encounters have already been solved, sometimes inefficiencies in his operations are pointed out, and many times valuable new ideas are picked up from trade publications.

COURT RULES ON COMPENSATION ACT

The general rule underlying practically all the workmen's compensation laws is that the workman or his family is entitled to compensation for injuries or death arising "out of or in the course of his employment;" and some neat and interesting points have arisen when the courts are called upon to decide just what is and is not "in the course of the employment."

A recent New York case along this this line arose out of a rather ovel set of circumstances, as the evidence showed that a night watchman who was employed to patrol a building and punch a time clock at regular intervals really sat down in a chair, went to sleep, fell down a chute running from the second floor to the pavement and was killed. His widow was asking damages.

"My late beloved husband was killed while he was employed as a watchman, and I am certainly entitled to damages," the widow maintained.

"No. A watchman can't do his work unless he's awake, and injuries received while he is asleep are not 'in the course of his employment,'" the employer argued.

The New York court of appeals decided in favor of the employer.

"When an employee is injured through some act of his own that is not an incident to his employment, and not authorized or induced by his employer," the court ruled, "the injury does not arise out of and in the course of his employment. In this case the acts of the workman, instead of being in the course of his employment, were directly contrary to the object and purpose for which he was employed."—Business.

FIXTURE COMPANY SALES SHOW INCREASE

The Georgia Store Fixture Co., representatives in this territory for the National Show Case Co., Dayton Scale Co., and McRae Refrigerators, have enjoyed a splendid business during the last month, not only showing a large increase in sales, but in the number of patrons served.

The excellent business outlook for fall has caused dealers in all sections of the southeast to remodel their stores and add fixtures in order to properly display their merchandise for the fall trade.

The Georgia Store Fixture company has come in for a big part of this trade and the prospects are bright for a continuation of their good business.

1,080 STUDENTS BEGIN FALL TERM AS EMORY OPENS

Emory University, Ga., September 27.—(Special.)—Official figures given out by officials here this morning show the enrollment for the fall quarter to be 1,080, an increase of 100 over that of last year's fall quarter. Others will enroll during the week, officers said.

Over half of this enrollment was in the college of liberal arts, 586 having registered in that school. Second in number was the medical school, with 212, and then in order the school of business administration with 133, the school of theology with 63, the law school with 58 and the graduate school with 28.

This brings the total enrollment for the year up to approximately 1,700, which is the number expected by the university authorities. The estimate made before registration that the total would reach 2,300 was, according to a statement issued by President Cox Saturday, unofficial.

Last Services Held For Mrs. Maddox, 93, Troup County Pioneer

LaGrange, Ga., September 27.—(Special.)—Funeral services for Mrs. Mariah Maddox, 93, one of LaGrange's most prominent and oldest women, who died at her home on Friday night, were held this afternoon, Dr. Spencer Tunnell, pastor of the First Baptist church, officiating. Interment was at Hillview cemetery.

Mrs. Maddox was a native of Troup county, having been born October 7, 1831.

She is survived by a brother, Judge J. B. Strong, and a large number of nieces and nephews.

URBAN LEAGUE WEEKLY BULLETIN

The seven-course dinner of the Twenty-Seventh club was prepared and served by the students of the Atlanta Urban League Opportunity school. In addition to the training that is being given at this school in the preparation of and the serving of foods for ordinary meals and private families, this occasion afforded an opportunity for them to gain some knowledge of how to serve a larger group and in a more formal manner. The members of the Twenty-Seventh club expressed their delight in the manner in which the food had been prepared, as well as the way the young women served it. The millinery department of the opportunity school is planning an exhibit in the early part of November, at which time the general public will get an opportunity of observing the progress that has been made in the matter of hat-making by the first class in millinery. Many of the young women in this department have already completed their first hat. New faces continue to appear in the plain-sewing and dress-making classes.

Rev. Francis Herman Gow, native of Cape Town, South Africa, is in Atlanta preaching in the various churches, gathering funds by which to return to his native land and become a real native missionary. Dr. Gow is an exceptional man from an intellectual, as well as a moral and spiritual, point of view. He is well prepared for the work he is returning to his native country to do.

The membership, through the auxiliaries of the Ebenezer Baptist church, entertained the Baptist Ministers' union and a number of specially invited guests at a dinner at the church in honor of Dr. A. D. Williams, the progressive pastor, in recognition and appreciation of his being elected treasurer of the National Baptist Association, Incorporated. Testimonial remarks were made by Dr. Ballou, Dr. E. P. Johnson, Hattie Simpson, B. J. Davis, W. J. Trent, Rev. Frank Herman Gow, Supervisor L. L. Craig, of the Urban League Employment service; Dr. D. D. Crawford, field secretary; Jesse O. Thomas and others.

Carmichael Tile Company's New Showroom, 104 E. Ellis St.

The new display rooms and offices of the Carmichael Tile company, at 104 East Ellis street, impresses one by their dignity and air of refinement. On the walls and porch in contrast to the white of the building itself, rough textured quarry tiles of a warm red shade have been used, giving contrast as well to the rich green of the grass and foliage. These warm tones of the outside invite entrance to this pleasing new showroom.

In the reception room the wonderful decorative value of tiles is again evidenced. Here, as well as in the main office, which comes into full view from the reception rooms, faience tiles have been employed throughout for floors and walls. Even the counters and door and window casings have been finished entirely in these tiles, creating a most beautiful and attractive effect. These rooms impress one with the opportunities which tiles afford as a finishing material for floors and walls.

Continuing through these attractive new quarters of the Carmichael Tile company into the sales room, further beautiful installations of faience tiles are seen on floor, mantel and fountain. One feels that the only worthwhile finishing material for floors and walls is tiles—of rich color shades and distinctive designs.

Everywhere in these impressive rooms are beautiful tiles—expressing as many styles of decoration as personal taste and individual fancy dictate. From the multitude of loose samples of various shapes and varieties of tiles which are on display for selection, one can imagine endless designs and color schemes, everyone unique and new in itself.

Three attractive sample tiled baths have been finished in these rooms. And one can scarcely believe there is a difference in the cost of each, all seem equally attractive. Each, however, has its own individual treatment which makes it stand out from the others. The first of these bathrooms has been finished entirely in colored tiles on both floor and walls. It has a shower compartment which adds greatly to its usefulness. This compartment has been finished in small tiles of varying shades which add a touch of contrast to the tiles of the bathroom proper, giving a variety in design and color that is distinctive and most pleasing. The other two bathrooms, while low in cost, seem equally attractive with their beautiful white glazed walls and contrasting colored floors.

The tiled kitchen on display is a room to delight the heart of every housewife. Even the servants cannot but be enthusiastic over the spotless gleaming walls of this model cookshop. The floor is of alternating gray and white flint tiles; the walls are in glazed white and glazed color tiles.

Coat rooms and toilets are attractively tiled in white with attractive color borders of glazed and mattglazed tiles.

White hexagon vitreous tiles cover the floor of the sample room, with the base and door trim of glazed ceramic mosaic.

The installation room displays several panels of floor tiles, and the doors are trimmed with different kinds of faience trim tiles. Black faience tiles outline the panels between doors, the field in each being reserved for any current tile design popular at the time.

From every viewpoint, these new showrooms of the Carmichael Tile company are a credit to the city, and easily worth a visit from all prospective home builders and true artists.

M. & M. READY-TO-WEAR REMODELS STORE FRONT

The M. & M. Ready-to-Wear company, well-known Atlanta retail credit store at 39 South Broad street, has recently remodeled their store front, adding two large and attractive show windows.

H. H. Hester, manager of the store, states that already increase in sales shows the advantage of show windows and that their sales during the last month have shown a very encouraging increase over the corresponding period of last year.

The M. & M. Ready-to-Wear store is owned and operated by M. J. Moldow, who has been in business in Atlanta for the last 18 years. The firm has built a splendid patronage among the better class of credit buyers, and the prospects for a fine business this fall are excellent.

The store was opened at its present location about four years ago.

La Follette Leaders To Fight for Place On Louisiana Ballot

New Orleans, La., September 27.—The names of La Follette-Wheeler presidential electors will not go on the official ballot in Louisiana in the November election unless the courts overrule the action today of Thomas Killeen, registrar of voters, who refused to certify to the list of names attached to a petition submitted by J. J. Finneran, head of the independent forces.

Mr. Killen announced that his refusal to certify to the names was based on a ruling by the attorney general's office that persons registered as affiliated with either of the dominant parties could not sign the La Follette nomination papers. The list submitted today by Mr. Finneran contained 700 signatures and it was understood the remaining 300 to bring the list to the required 1,000 names would come from the country parishes.

The registrar stated the list contained the names of many voters who had registered as democrats.

Finneran declared he would bring mandamus proceedings in an effort to have the names placed on the ballot.

ATLANTA NURSE GETS PLACE AT LAGRANGE

LaGrange, Ga., September 27.—(Special.)—Mrs. Ethelyn B. Patterson, who has been superintendent of the Dunson hospital for the past two years, has resigned. Mrs. Dorrit D. Sledge, superintendent of nurses, has been elected to succeed Mrs. Patterson and Miss Hattie Weldon, of the Grady hospital, of Atlanta, has been chosen as superintendent of nurses to succeed Mrs. Sledge.

War on Truant School Children To Open Monday

Although approximately 1,000 children have enrolled in Atlanta's white grammar schools since opening of the school year the first part of this month, between 750 and 800 have failed to register, it was estimated Saturday by M. E. Coleman, director of census and attendance.

Notices have been sent to parents of practically every truant student, and field work will be started Monday to round up all children of school age and qualifications who have failed to report.

With results obtained by sending of notices and the active campaign to be waged in bringing all children into school, it is expected that practically all of them will have registered within the next two weeks with the exception of those who have moved to Atlanta recently and who have failed to enroll. The latter class, however, comprises a comparatively small number.

The law provides that in cases in which parents refuse to send children to school after being duly notified, fines of $10 per day, not to exceed $1,000, can be assessed, starting ten days after receipt of the notice.

Ottawa, Ontario.—Canada has one mile of railway to every 220 people, a larger mileage in proportion to population than any other country, with a total mileage of nearly 40,000.

SALARIES FOR SERVICES INAUGURATED BY FIRM

The Western Auto Supply company, a chain-store concern operating 100 retail stores on the Pacific coast, has discontinued the practice of paying its salesmen on a commission basis.

"What we are striving for," said Ben Pepperdine, president of the company, "is the highest possible form of service. We want the man who comes in to buy something out of the cafeteria bin—a pump-washer or an oil cup—to receive the same courtesy and attention as the man who comes in for a hundred-dollar set of tires.

"But our salesmen are not confined to departments; each one sells over the entire store. Under the commission plan, therefore, the salesmen were always liable to the temptation of catering too much to the man who was heading for the tire section and leaving the man at the cafeteria bin to shift for himself. The only way we could be sure of giving the same service to everybody was to eliminate commissions and put the salesman on a straight salary basis. Bonuses, yes; but commissions, no."—Business.

ARKWRIGHT NAMED AMONG 60 PUBLIC UTILITY LEADERS

A list of sixty outstanding men in the public utility business in the nation, which includes the name of Preston S. Arkwright, president of the Georgia Railway and Power company, is published in the fiftieth anniversary issue of the Electrical World, copies of which have just been received here. The magazine, a leading publication in the electrical field, refers to them as "Men who have impressed their personality on the industry and contributed to its upbuilding."

Other public utility executives to whom this tribute is paid by the magazine include Martin J. Insull, of Chicago, president of the Middle West Utilities company; Gerard Swope, of New York, president of the General Electric company; Edwin S. Webster, of Boston, president of Stone and Webster, utility operators; Thomas W. Martin, of Birmingham, president of the Alabama Power company; Franklin T. Griffith, of Portland, Ore., president of the National Electric Light association; J. W. Lieb, vice president of the New York Edison company, and Frank W. Smith, vice president of the United Electric and Power company, of New York.

I. C. C. CHARGES ROADS WITH EXCESS COSTS

The Interstate Commerce Commission in a report dated July 15, but just made public, states it has found that the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy; Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul; Philadelphia & Reading; St. Louis-San Francisco, Missouri Pacific; St. Louis Southwestern and the Texas & Pacific R. R. companies in 1920 contracted for repairs of locomotives in outside shops or purchased locomotive parts at cost "materially in excess of the cost of similar work or production in the respondents' own shops, in some instances incurred because of a want of adequate facilities in their own shops, which the excess expenditures would have supplied or gone far to supply."

Five of the commissioners dissented from this opinion of the commission and Commissioner Hall presented the following dissenting opinion:

"For reasons sufficiently indicated in my expression appended to a former report, I take no part in this proceeding and no share of responsibility for the conclusions expressed either in this or in any other report of the series.

"Through them all, thus far, runs the seeming assumption that a railroad owes a duty to the public to repair or rebuild its own locomotives and, perhaps, its other rolling stock in its own shops, and that it violates that duty when the work is done in some other shop. Even when the difference in cost is negligible or the need great it is admonished to do the work at home.

"'Honest, economical and efficient management' does not require a man to make or mend his own shoes. What a railroad shall do with the force of men and the shop facilities which it has at the time is a matter of judgment over which we have no review. We can not direct it to employ more men, or less men, or other men, or to build or alter shops.

"It's duty to the public is that of a common carrier subject to the interstate commerce act and related acts. Our duty and our jurisdiction stops with those acts and beyond them it is not for us to check, control or condemn."

BACK WITH CARLTON

C. L. Sease, popular young salesman, has returned to the boys' department of the Carlton Shoe and Clothing company, where he was located for so many years. Hundreds of boys in Atlanta and throughout the state will be glad to welcome him back to his "first love," where he has made so many friends.

HI SCHOOLS READY FOR FULL SESSIONS

All Atlanta junior and senior high schools Monday will swing into full sessions for the first time this year, it was stated Saturday by Willis A. Sutton, superintendent of schools. With completion of portable buildings at Boys' High, Tech High and Bass Junior High schools, those institutions will be able to operate on full-time schedules, completing the list of the city's schools which have been on part time programs since the opening of school early this month.

The two senior high schools were to have operated with full sessions Friday, but rearrangement of some classes could not be completed in time, and inauguration of the normal program was postponed until Monday. Students at Boys' High and Tech High will report at 8:30 o'clock mornings, and will be dismissed at 2:10 o'clock in the afternoon.

Work has been started on covered walks between high schools and portable buildings, and when completed this week will permit classes to move between buildings without interrupting schedules. During the past several weeks rain, by preventing students from transferring from the school buildings to the portables, has forced cancellation of several classes, and curtailment of others.

Despite all handicaps, fine progress in class work has been reported, and students have kept pace with their studies so well that lengthening of the school day to make up for lost time will not be necessitated.

Mr. Hafley has a wide circle of friends in this city, who are glad to welcome him back to Atlanta after his absence of several years, and who wish him well in his new business undertaking.

In speaking of his prospects for business here, Mr. Hafley said: "I consider that we are particularly fortunate in securing representation for the Favorite line of furnaces and heating appliances. This line is favorably known from coast to coast and thousands of home owners in all sections of the country have found the Favorite furnace the most economical and most satisfactory furnace in every respect that could be installed.

"The stoves and ranges as well as the furnaces are famous for their low fuel consumption, and added to this advantage is the fact that their first cost is much below the average."

Great Religious Revival Now on at Louisville, Ga.

Dr. George W. Truett, World-Famous Preacher, Drawing Crowds for Miles Around.

BY LOUIE D. NEWTON.

Louisville, Ga., September 27.—(Special.)—With cotton enough already ginned to pay their debts and make first payments on new cars, corn in bounteous yield hanging upon the stalk for the final touch of the autumn sun, peanuts covering the face of the earth to fatten the waiting pigs, potatoes bulging the hills with their generous supply of starch to match the richness of the possums in December, sugar cane growing a joint a day—with all this rich background of contentment, resulting from a remarkable year of successful farming, southeast Georgia is turning aside for the next ten days to go to church and "get religion."

Dr. George W. Truett, world-wide preacher of the Christian religion, now pastor of the First Baptist church of Dallas, Texas, is the preacher in the meeting and E. Powell Lee, of Macon, is leading the singing. The meeting began Thursday night and continues through next Sunday, October 5.

Tent Erected.

A big tent, seating 3,500 people, has been erected in the center of this town, the one time capital of Georgia, and from every direction the big canvas can be seen.

The roads may be bad in Georgia, or they may just be reported to be had. One thing I do know, the roads are not bad enough to stop the people from traveling to Louisville to hear Dr. Truett preach. An hour before he was to speak this morning, the cars were parked about the big tent from towns 40 miles away. A man who drove a big sedan from a neighboring county seat was asked how he found the roads.

"Well now, I tell you about this road business," he replied, as he scoured the mud from his shoes against the curb in front of the big tent, "roads are bad or good usually in ratio to the interest we have in the place we are going. For example, I go into the Ogeechee river swamp when the bream are bedding and I drive over the worst roads in the world, but it never occurs to me that they are rough. Today I was headed for Louisville to hear this man Truett preach and I didn't think about mud and bumps. I heard him in 1920 when he spoke on the steps of the capitol in Washington and it was enough for me to know that George Truett was at this end of the journey. The roads didn't matter."

Of course, his reply is relative, but evidently it is the principle which is operating in the minds of several hundred other people. At least, they have braved the roads and the lowering clouds and they are in Louisville.

Mayor R. L. Bethea has been so interested in the meeting that this morning he failed to go by the city hall to see whether there are any speeders to be fined. The merchants have been on the streets meeting the visitors and seeing about their comfort, disregarding the claims of business for the time.

Banker Is Leader.

"Bill" Abbott, the president of the First National bank, is the mogul of the affair. He has given all his time for the past month or so to the plans for the meeting. One would guess that the lobby of his bank is the lobby of a convention hall where Baptists, Presbyterians and Methodists have come together for a great religious conference. The whole town seems to have turned aside to seek religion and to pray and sing.

They united the Baptist, Presbyterian and Methodist churches of Louisville in an effort and appointed a general arrangement committee consisting of W. W. Abbott, chairman; J. G. Gunter, W. R. Sinquefield, M. Plaxico, R. L. Bethea, J. R. Phillips, W. A. Malory, R. S. Farmer and C. W. Powers to put on the big meeting. This committee appointed many subcommittees. Among the chairmen of these various committees are the following well-known Louisville people: R. L. Bethea, Jas. B. Polhill, J. R. Phillips, Mrs. W. S. Murphy, Mrs. W. R. Sinquefield, Jas. B. Polhill, Jr., Mrs. R. G. Rice, Mrs. E. N. Willie, M. R. Little, Mrs. Jas. B. Polhill, R. N. Whigham. They also appointed committees in nearby towns as follows: Dr. W. B. Warthem, Davisboro; Mrs. W. Georgia Peach Growers Develop New Plan of Distribution

BY V. D. CALLANAN,
U. S. Department of Agriculture

The marketing of the 1920 Georgia peach crop was one of the most difficult problems ever faced by fruit growers and shippers in any producing section. Over 13,000 cars were shipped to markets east of the Mississippi river within a period of approximately ten weeks, in competition with shipments from a cantaloupe crop in California of over 17,000 cars and watermelon crops in Florida and Georgia of more than 6,300 cars and 14,500 cars, respectively.

Approximately 75 per cent of the pach movement occurred in July, shipments for that month being 10,229 cars, as compared with July totals of 5,898 cars in 1923, 3,681 cars in 1922, and 5,564 cars in 1921. Carlot shipments in June, on the other hand, were the lightest in four years, being only 1,704, as against 2,238 in 1923, 3,002 in 1922, and 3,659 cars in 1921.

When it became evident that this season's crop would be unusually large, representatives of nearly all of the marketing agencies and shippers in the state joined with the Georgia Peach Growers' exchange in requesting the bureau of agricultural economics, United states department of agriculture, to assign a representative who would "sit in" upon a daily meeting to consider the distribution of shipments similar to that followed by cantaloupe shippers and government representatives in the Imperial Valley, California. The request was granted and a study by the bureau of the carlot unloads of peaches in the principal markets and the destinations of Georgia shipments for the years 1921, 1922 and 1923 followed. From the data compiled, a tentative working basis for determining the relative consuming powers of the various markets was obtained, but no attempt was made to work out an arbitrary division of the tonnage upon a preconceived plan.

After the shipping season opened, the distribution of unsold cars due for diversion each evening at Nashville, Cincinnati, and Potomac yards, was determined by the sales manager of the exchange, in agreement with the other representatives present at a meeting held each afternoon, after a study of the billings east and west through the three gateways, the passings, and that day's reports from the various markets showing the number of cars on track, prevailing prices, and the opinions of the dealers. Before deciding upon the number to be diverted to each of the larger terminals, every small city capable of handling a car to advantage was considered in order that the larger markets might be maintained in as good condition as possible. The balance of the tonnage was then prorated among the cities considered best prepared to handle it. So far as was practicable, consignments were made to those dealers who had been buying upon an f. o. b. basis, in accordance with the exchange's policy, but when market conditions made f. o. b. buying impossible from a dealer's standpoint, this policy was modified and consignments made to the distributors considered best qualified to handle them.

The distribution plan followed this season was flexible enough to permit adjustment of shipments to changing conditions in the various markets and regulation of receipts therein. At different times during the shipping season, however, it was impossible to put any very large amount of fruit in small markets. For example, after the peak of the Uneeda movement, dealers in most small cities were so stocked with peaches that they were unwilling to attempt to handle additional supplies and it was only good judgment to put most of the consignments in the larger terminals where facilities for moving the fruit into retail channels were better. Again, after the heavy movement of Hileys, the smaller markets were emphatic in refusing to handle additional receipts on consignment and it was not until Elbertas were ready that dealers in those cities showed any willingness to push the movement of peaches.

In determining the success of this season's efforts to obtain a wider distribution of the peach crop, the most practical method is that of comparing the tonnage unloaded in the larger markets with the volume and percentage of the crop unloaded in those cities in other years. For this purpose, the following statistics from official records of the U. S. bureau of agricultural economics are of interest:

Reduce Tonnage.

A study of these figures shows fairly conclusively that this year's distribution plan reduced the proportionate tonnage in the larger markets and that the smaller ones, accordingly, were used to a greater extent than ever before. New York city, the principal consuming market for Georgia peaches, received only 23 per cent of the total crop this season, or the smallest percentage of the crop ever received there. Yet there was little complaint that New York did not get its share of the fruit. The increased percentages shown in Chicago, Cleveland, Detroit, Minneapolis and St. Paul, on the other hand, were desirable and show that consumption of Georgia peaches in the west was increased, as was the hope of all. The comparative figures for the four seasons are of interest in that they show New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Pittsburg and Cincinnati were relieved by shipments to cities in the territories surrounding those terminals instead of being the targets of glutting receipts. Complete statistics showing the number of cars shipped to individual markets are not available at the time of writing this review, but, when they are published in the regular summary to be issued shortly, it is reasonably safe to predict that a wide distribution will be shown also in the Ohio and upper Mississippi valleys. If the Elberta crop had matured at a more nearly normal time, it would undoubtedly have been possible to ship an even greater percentage of the movement to the west.

From this brief review it may fairly be claimed that this year's plan of distribution was successful in its original purpose—namely, the avoiding of disastrous gluts in the larger terminals and the development of small outlets. That prices received by the growers during the greater part of the season were ruinously low is indisputable, but they were the inevitable result of the operation of the law of supply and demand. Statistics of the Georgia Cooperative Crop Reporting service, at Atlanta, show that on January 1, 1924, there were 10,787,332 peach trees of bearing age in the state and 6,568,459 trees of non-bearing age, or a total of 17,355,791 peach trees in Georgia. Barring unusually unfavorable developments, it is safe to predict, therefore, that this year's crop will be equalled, if not exceeded, some time in the future. If the growing of peaches in Georgia is to be continued on an economical basis, the problem of marketing such a large tonnage in the time permitted will require the best brains of the industry and all factors concerned — growers, marketing agencies, railroads and refrigerator lines, bankers and marketing officials —must cooperate in determining its solution. Anything less than the utmost effort of each and every one concerned may spell ruin for the man most vitally interested—the peach grower.

Banco Ring's Aide May Return Here To Face Charges

Will Edward O. Ellis make his word good?

He is said to be one of the chief aides of Floyd Woodward in the million-dollar bunco syndicate, which operated in Atlanta four years ago.

Ellis was arrested in Mexico City several months ago and has promised Bert Donaldson, attache of Solicitor General John A. Boykin's office, that he will come back to Atlanta and face trial on state and federal indictments connecting him with the Woodward gang.

That is the story brought back to Atlanta Saturday by Mr. Donaldson, who went to Mexico City to bring Ellis here. Arriving there, Donaldson learned that necessary legal procedure in Mexico to force extradition would require two years.

After talking with Ellis the latter agreed to return to Atlanta "on his honor." He gave as his only reason for leaving the city when the bunco rink was unearthed that he wanted to "spare his wife the disgrace of a convict husband." She has since died, he told Mr. Donaldson, and he declares he is willing to return and stand trial.

Mr. Donaldson believe that Ellis will keep his word.

Greensboro, Ga., September 27.—After having served as secretary to United States Senator William J. Harris since 1919, Cranston Williams, of this city, has resigned his position to again enter the newspaper field, which he left when the Georgia senator was elected to the national capital.

Mr. Williams managed the campaign for the reelection of Senator Harris in the recent democratic state primary, and since that time has been taking a rest with friends and relatives here.

Except for the time that he has served as secretary to Senator Harris, and his service in the world war, he has practically engaged himself in newspaper work for the majority of his life.

At the time when the United States entered the world conflict, Mr. Williams was editor of The Americus Times-Recorder, and was said to have been the first Georgia newspaperman to offer his service to his country.

Following his commission as a second lieutenant of the infantry, Mr. Williams was assigned to the 56th infantry, seventh division, and served continuously with this unit during their stay in France. During that period he was promoted to the rank of first lieutenant, and later to captain. He commanded the machine gun company of his regiment while he was a first lieutenant, and was cited by the government for gallantry in action.

Women May Be Barred As Presidential Electors

There is a possibility that the names of a number of women, now on the list of presidential electors for Georgia, submitted by various party leaders, will have to be stricken. Attorney General George M. Napier has been asked to give an opinion on the legality of women serving as electors, following the statement made Saturday at the capitol that the law creating the electoral college requires that it shall be made up of "qualified male voters."

It is said that this law, a relic of the day before women won the franchise, has never been amended to meet modern conditions.

Mr. Napier is expected to give an opinion on this point early next week.

On the list of presidential electors filed with the state executive department, in order that their names may be placed upon the official ballots for the election on November 4, the names of women appear in the democratic and prohibition party lists, but none in the republican. The progressive party has not yet furnished the executive department with a list of electors.

Prominent Women.

Mrs. Lon Dickey, of Fitzgerald, is nominee for Democratic elector from the Third district, while Mrs. Standifer Stevenson, of Atlanta, is an elector-elect on the prohibition ticket. Mrs. R. L. Miller, of Waynesboro, is an alternate elector for the democrats for the First district; Mrs. Oscar McKenzie, of Montezuma an alternate for the Third district, and Mrs. Annie Freeman Johnson, of Rome, an alternate for the Seventh district.

Democratic, republican and independent party headquarters for the presidential campaign have already been established in Atlanta.

The progressive party will hold its convention in Macon on next Monday, while the democratic state convention will meet in Macon on Wednesday, October 8.

On that date democrats will ratify the nominations for national and state offices made at the party primary held on September 10, will adopt a platform and select a new state executive committee. It is understood, however, that the present executive committee will be reelected almost as a whole.

The convention will be made up of 412 delegates, each county being entitled to two delegates for each representative it has in the lower house of the general assembly. A number of resolutions bearing upon the national presidential campaign will be introduced, and the importance of active work by every democrat in the state between now and election day will be stressed.

GALES KILL BIRDS

Rare Specimen Beaten to Death Against Lighthouse.

Savannah, Ga., September 27.—(Special.)—The week-end found Tybee light house looking like an ornithological collection in a museum, from the number of rare and unusual birds' bodies held for mounting. Gales and heavy weather of the past three days heave driven into the tower of the lighthouse scores of birds in a distress. Many of them were beaten to death against the glass windows.

In the collection to be preserved are water thrushes, red eye vireos, Bachman's warblers, yellow throated warblers, black and white warblers, parula warblers, Maryland yellow throats, lesser yellow legs, Arcadia fly-catchers, Cape May warblers, American red starts, black-throated blue warblers, knots, and rice or butter birds. There are from one to fifteen specimens of each, nearly all migratory birds.

A memorial window, in commemoration of the late Andrew Carnegie, was unveiled recently in the Criech Parish church, in the far north of Scotland.

Ex-Federal Officer, Who Broke Parole, Is Sent to Prison

Savannah, Ga., September 27.—(Special.)—W. K. Walker, held here several days on a charge of representing himself as a federal officer, and, it is alleged, attempting to obtain money from the local families of men in the federal prison at Atlanta, was today taken there to complete a sentence from which he had been paroled. He had been sentenced for accepting a bribe while serving as a government agent.

No records on W. K. Walker were available at the federal penitentiary Saturday night. Attaches in the warden's office said that no new prisoners were admitted during the day.

"DOGGONE!"

Some little German police puppies that lived at 229 Peachtree Street are on their way to new homes. One by one they are washing their faces, slicking down their fur and putting on their best smiles of greeting, preparing to wag their way into the hearts of new owners.

All because their master, Mr. Vaughn, wanted to sell them. And it didn't take their master's voice to bring customers after them—all it took was a little ad in the "Live Stock" column of The Atlanta Constitution.

That's about all there is to this tale—except that we might mention—

WHILE YOU HESITATE

Morningside

GROWS MORE VALUABLE

MORE valuable because more and more beautiful—more distinguished—more unique among the most notable residential sections of America.

THERE will never be—CAN NEVER BE—anything ordinary or commonplace about Morningside. No single homesite but what possesses a complete scenic individuality. It may be the wonderful trees, or the graceful contour lines of the land's rise and fall, or the incomparable view the site affords, or some other conspicuous feature, but something is there to redeem each and every building site from any tendency to sameness or uninterestingness.

MANY SITES have already been chosen at Morningside—many have been graced with homes or exquisite architectural beauty, each lending an added tone of distinctiveness to a section already widely famed for its preeminent scenic endowment.

MORNINGSIDE will be known as a section with wonderful streets. Engineers have laid at Morningside the finest and most enduring character of pavements possible to construct. Five broad, table-smooth highways invite the motorist to a tour of vivid interest through Morningside.

ROCK SPRINGS ROAD, Lanier Boulevard, Cumberland Road and Sherwood Road lead you windingly through beauties of hill and dale seldom to be seen in even the most celebrated, old-established residential sections in America.

MORNINGSIDE DRIVE—A magnificent boulevard connecting Ansley Park with Druid Hills, will, before many years, be one of America's most noted drives. Elms and crepe myrtles line its either side, planted by the Atlanta Woman's Club as an age-enduring memorial to the south's immortal son, Woodrow Wilson.

MORNINGSIDE IS READY!

ALL of the domestic utilities are ready for individual use at Morningside. Telephone and electric light trunk wires have been installed ready for service. Sewers, gas and water mains have been put in and paving, curbing and parkswards finished.

WHILE the beautiful, balmy Fall days make life out of doors exhilarating and zestful we invite you to see Morningside. See it while a wide choice of fine sites is spread out before you. See it while its most desirable spots may still be secured at present low prices. See it that you may know what a realm of rare charm and scenic glory lies just at Atlanta's woodsy edge, but still within the corporate limits—with Highland Avenue electric cars serving its eastern approach and Crosstown Express Buses serving the western approach.

PHONE US and let us know when you can most conveniently go and we will gladly provide a comfortable car and a courteous attendant to show you through this Eden subdivision. Of course there will not be one particle of obligation on your part, you will go as our guest and we can promise that both the trip and the view of Morningside will repay you well for the time devoted to the tour.

JOEL HUNTER NAMED CITY CLUB PRESIDENT

At the annual meeting of the City club held Friday evening at the Piedmont hotel, Joel Hunter was elected president, Dudley Cowles vice president and the following as the board of governors: William Casey, Walter McElreath, C. W. McClure, W. J. Sayward and C. D. Montgomery.

The City club of Atlanta is one of a chain of clubs established in the large cities of the United States. The scope of the City club is primarily to be an open forum wherein townsmen who are members may bring before their friends questions and problems which call for improvement or solution. Principally among the city clubs the almost universal question of municipal government has been the uppermost theme. Government by commission, government by city manager and composites have been discussed and rediscussed; the size, peculiarity and general condition of each city calling for different treatment. It is universally agreed that the city government of Atlanta can be improved. This remark has no personal significance but refers only to the form of government. It is the purpose of the City club to make a careful study of this matter on a strictly non-partisan basis so that in the end a distinct contribution will be made to our political situation.

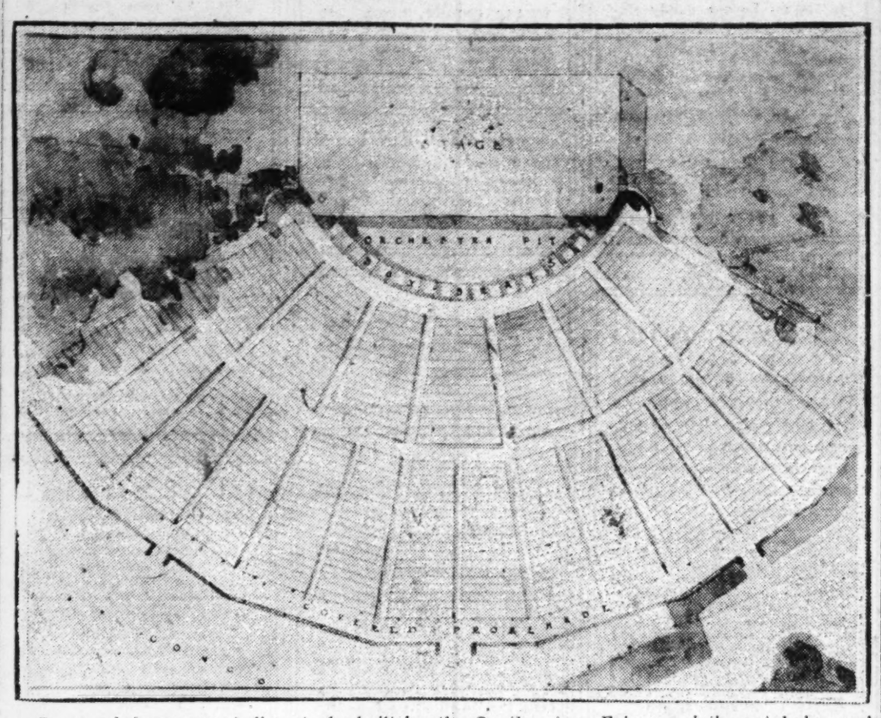

An interesting phase of this and one calling for an educational propaganda to the citizenship of our city and state is the question of exercising their right of franchise. In a tabulation gotten up by the National Association of Manufacturers on the presidential election in 1920, in the state of Georgia of those eligible to vote only 11 per cent of them voted. In Mississippi only 10 per cent voted and in South Carolina only 2 per cent voted.

The purpose of the City club is to aid in improving the economic and social conditions of the city and the state and to establish and to foster close and friendly relations between Atlanta and her sister cities of Georgia to the end that all Georgians may unite in a common cause for the welfare of the commonwealth.

Plan Missionary Meet.

Bainbridge, Ga., September 27.—(Special.)—Colquitt and Miller counties are making preparations for the entertainment of the meeting of the Woman's Missionary union annual state rally, September 30. Mrs. Charles Cater, of Quitman, divisional vice president, and Miss Laura Lee Patrick, of Atlanta, W. M. U., secretary, will attend the meeting.

Great Stadium Planned for Lakewood Following Signing of 25-Year Lease

Proposed $100,000 stadium to be built by the Southeastern Fair association at Lakewood park, as a part of a huge development program.

Summer Opera for Six Weeks Each Year Is One of Plans Included in Lakewood Program.

An 18-hole golf course and club house, a $100,000 stadium, built within a great natural amphitheater near the splendid mile oval track at Lakewood park, are outstanding features of a big program proposed in Atlanta's mammoth amusement park, which are now to go forward following the signing of a 25-year lease on the Lakewood property by Mayor Walter A. Sims, for the city of Atlanta, owner of the property, and Oscar Mills, president of the fair association, lessees.

The lease was signed during the past week, following authorization granted by city council some days ago.

The golf course will be the only one of its kind in or near Atlanta, and one of very few like it in the southern states. It will be open to the public, anyone wishing to play the course being welcome to do so.

The club house will be erected in a beautiful pine grove on the city property and will have the unique distinction of being within a stone's throw of the first, ninth and eighteenth greens, making it possible for players to use either the entire course, or either half, without playing the greens out of their regular order.

The big concrete stadium will be built for the fair association by well-known capitalists of Atlanta, who will be repaid out of the income of the amusement park. Plans already have been approved for the erection of the stadium, which will seat between 7,500 and 10,000 people, and work will begin within a short time, it was stated. The design for the stadium, by Robert & Co., Atlanta engineers, contemplates the erection of concrete seats in terraces, forming a semi-circle about a mammoth open-air stage, where musical and other programs of the most spectacular and elaborate kind may be given. Another feature of the stadium is that the seats are elevated to the extent that the audience may be permitted to overlook the stage, when not in use, and plainly see an immense parade ground beyond, where athletic events, military reviews, school gatherings and other large out-of-door assemblages may gather.

Open-Air Opera Near.

In a talk with Mr. Mills and Victor H. Kreigshaber, well-known capitalist and music-lover of Atlanta, it was developed that the fair association expects to make it possible for the people of Atlanta to enjoy for the first time an open-air opera, the musical events being planned upon a most magnificent scale. The opera, like the summer evening musical events given in a big St. Louis municipal park, will be on for six weeks each summer and the immense stadium will be devoted to school exhibitions, athletic events, big conventions and other occasions for which it might be appropriately used during the balance of the year.

An organization has been formed, it was stated, to back the summer opera and this body is composed of some of the outstanding men of the city, including: C. H. Candler, president; Mell R. Wilkinson, Frederick J. Paxon, Victor H. Kreigshaber, vice presidents; H. W. Davis, treasurer; Robert S. Parker, secretary and attorney; C. B. Bidwell, executive manager. Frederick J. Paxon is chairman of the board of directors, composed of W. L. Peel, C. H. Candler, Oscar Mills, Robert S. Parker, Frederick J. Paxon, Ivan E. Allen, H. M. Atkinson, Clark Howell, James B. Nevin, John S. Cohen, Robert F. Maddox, J. M. B. Hoxey, W. R. C. Smith, Victor H. Krickshaber, W. M. Brownlee, Harrison Jones, W. H. Glenn, Lindsay Hopkins, W. O. Foote, W. D. Ellis, Jr.

The official name of the summer musical organization is the Atlanta Light Opera company, and it is understood that with the large number of music-lovers and supporters of such amusements, operas given will be of the very highest order.

Stadium Plans Begin.

"The big stadium, which will be unique in several ways," said Mr. Mills, "is to be erected without delay. Plans already have been drafted by Robert & company.

'Work on the stadium," continued Mr. Mills, "will begin within a short time, and it will be pushed to a rapid completion. This speed will be enhanced by the fact that a minumum of grading will be necessary on account of the natural formation of the amphitheater which is to be the site of the structure."

Mr. Kreigshaber, capitalist, music-lover and promoter of high-class public amusements, originated the plan of building an immense out-door theater for Atlanta and of giving the people of this city a season of light opera during summer months.

Mr. Kreigshaber gained his idea for the Atlanta theater from a visit to Forest Park, St. Louis, where he saw immense crowds attend the 10 weeks of musical comedy and light opera there. "The thousands of people crowding into the stadium there," Mr. Kreigshaber "and the enthusiasm shown by them in their enjoyment of the entertainment, stimulated my desire to have a similar amusement center in our own city."

Returning to Atlanta, Mr. Kreigshaber enlisted the aid of several leading music-lovers among business and professional men of the city with the result of gathering the above named citizens into an organization to form the Atlanta Light Opera company.

Found Ready Response.

"It appeared to be a perfectly feasible plan," concluded Mr. Kreigshaber, "to give six weeks of good music in an out-door theater at Lakewood park, and when I presented the matter to the Atlanta people I found a ready response. There is no doubt in my mind, or in the minds of others associated with me in this enterprise that it will become one of the great civic successes for which Atlanta has gained suh remarkable fame. It will make Lakewood the amusement enter of Atlanta and Atlanta will be more than ever the music and amusement center of the south."

With reference to the magnificent golf course that is proposed for the city's property, adjacent to the fair grounds, Mr. Mills said that this would become one of the leading features of greater Lakewood. He also stated that this course with its 18 holes, will be the largest and the most splendidly laid out in the south.

"We are planning to begin within a short time upon the buildling of the links," said Mr. Mills, "and when completed it will be one of the most attractive courses in the southern states. Being laid out in the beautiful grove of handsome forest trees, the course will have a number of unique and attractive features, one of which will be the fact that its first, ninth and 18th greens will be within a stone's throw of the splendid golf club that is to be built at once. This will enable players to cover the first nine holes, or go the full course, as they may elect, finding themselves near the clubhouse at the windup in either case. The convenience of stepping from the course after an 18-hole play, finding the showers and other luxuries of the institution at hand, can easily be imagined.

Will Employ Experts.

"Well-known golf experts, landscapers and sportsmen will be engaged in the laying out and buillding of the 18-hole golf club," Mr. Mills continued, "and it may be depended upon that it will be designed and equipped with the purpose in view of making it the best course in the south."

The club will stand near the western border of the city's property, near the highway, and will be easily accessible from that direction. The course will be open to everyone who wishes to play the game, being a municipally-owned course.

Mr. Mills stated that with the signing of the long-term lease between the city and the Southeastern Fair association would result also in the immediate beginning of a program to improve and otherwise develop the amusement park at Lakewood. It will become Greater Lakewood in every sense, it was stated, the walks and driveways coming in for better pavements, more buildings of a permanent and more modern type and other improvements that will greatly increase the attractiveness of the park.

"We are going to make not only a finer grounds for holding the increasing important annual fairs, but we expect to make the park so attractive that it will become the great amusement center of the south. In other words, we will endeavor to give the people of Atlanta a real amusement park, a place that will be delightful in every sense of the word, where young and old may gather to enjoy the best types of amusements that are offered," Mr. Mills said.

WINNERS IN PRIMARY VOICE APPRECIATION

Appreciation of support in the city primary of last Wednesday, and promises of continued "best service," is expressed in statements made Saturday by W. E. Saunders, reelected councilman from the twelfth ward; Councilman J. Allen Couch, of the fifth ward, who was elected to an aldermanic seat; William A. Hansell, named to succeed himself as chief of construction; Thomas G. Morris, new councilman from the fifth ward, and C. G. Allen, elected to represent the second ward in council.

"My reelection places the people's stamp of approval on my activities in council," stated Mr. Saunders, "and to the best of my ability I will strive to continue my services to people of the twelfth ward. I want to express my sincere thanks to those who voted for me and state that I bear no malice against those who worked for my opponent's election. I also wish to assure all that I will put forth my best efforts to represent their interests."

Mr. Couch, who left the city on the day following election, issued the following statement on his return Saturday:

"I fully appreciate the support and votes of those who made my election possible, and hold nothing against those who opposed me. I fully believe that I was elected on my merits and past record, as I made no statements during my campaign which were not based on facts, and did not in any way attempt to discredit my opponent. As alderman, I will attempt to prove that I deserve the confidence placed in me by the people when they elected me, even as I have done during my present term."

Mr. Hansell left Atlanta Wednesday night, before the returns of the primary had been tabulated. From Savannah, where he and Mrs. Hansell boarded a steamer for a short trip to New York, he dispatched this telegram:

"Hurrah for the victory. Hurrah for the boys. Hurrah for the present organization. Ask the newspapers to thank all the citizens of Atlanta for their splendid support and endorsement of the faithful and able organization that I am proud to head as chief. We will vindicate the public's trust in us by giving the city an even greater era of improvement and progress than during the last record-breaking term. Regards to everybody."

Thomas C. Morris' statement follows:

"To the people of the fifth ward I extend my heartfelt thanks for their support and friendship in the recent primary. I ran a clean race, neither doing nor saying anything for which I have any regrets. I was elected without making a single promise to anyone. But I make a promise now: I am going to serve you faithfully. My every effort will be for the betterment of our ward and the whole city. Especially do I thank the ladies who stood by me so nobly, and that 'ole gang' of mine with whom I have worked and served for almost 15 years. Remember, 'gang,' your troubles are my troubles. To those who saw fit to oppose me, I have the kindest feelings, and hope that they will cooperate with me in working for the good of all our people."

C. G. Allen, new councilman from the second ward, said:

"I wish to thank my many friends whose loyalty and untiring efforts in my behalf was instrumental in bringing about my election over both my opponents. It shall be my policy to serve in the 1925 council as a man who never shirks duty, always willing, and ready to serve the people of the second ward and Atlanta, faithfully and intelligently. To those who opposed me I have but the kindest of feelings and good will, and ask their cooperation and support in the interest of the second ward and Atlanta in general."

FOUR ATLANTANS OBTAIN PATENTS ON NEW DEVICES

Patents on inventions have been granted to four Atlantans within the past few days, according to news received from Washington.

They were granted to Josiah P. Stevens, president of the J. P. Stevens Engraving company; Andrew M. Fairlie, a chemist, with offices in the Citizens and Southern Bank building; Joseph L. Baya, of 218 Blue Ridge avenue, and Ferdinand M. Kaufman, who lives at the Piedmont hotel.

Mr. Stevens' invention, it is said, was in the form of an indicator for use in a bridge game. It is designed to indicate the deal, and clears up the confusion often arising in the playing of cards.

A pavement composition, which, it it claimed, will stand rougher wear and is much more durable than ordinary pavement composition, was patented by Mr. Fairlie. The composition is made by a mixture of copper slag with asphaltic materials, it is said.

Mr. Baya was granted a patent on a specially designed radiator cap, while Mr. Kaufman received his on a special kind of box.

JEWISH NEW YEAR SERVICES TO DRAW IMMENSE THRONGS

Rosh Hashanah, the Jewish new year, will be celebrated today in Atlanta, as in every part of the world, with more than 2,000 members of the Atlanta temple and scores of visitors from over the state participating in ceremonies.

Religious exercises will be held in the temple, located on East Pryor street, at 8 o'clock and 10 o'clock, this morning. Rabbi David Marx will officiate at both services.

Each year great crowds attend, such throngs seeking admission that seating space had to be reserved for members and out-of-town visitors. Even under this plan many were turned away last year.

A new system will be inaugurated this year, it was announced Saturday by Rabbi Marx, who declared that in order that no one be denied admission, services will be held at 11 o'clock both today and tomorrow. A service will also be held at another hour during one of the two days if necessary to care for all those who desire to attend.

Yom Kippur, or Day of Atonement, another day of observance by Jews of the world, will be observed for ten days after Rosh Hashanah. Services will be conducted on October 7 and 8 with Rabbi Marx officiating, it was learned.

Bradley Hall, 300 years old, is to be transported 30 miles from its present site at Kingswinford, England, to Stratford-on-Avon.

Tech Defeats Petrels, 19-0, in Football Opener

Wycoff Stars As Maurer Is Held

BY GEORGE CONGDON.

As solid a defense as one wants to see in the middle of the season, and a sketchy offense that centered in just one man, Doug Wycoff, fullback, sent the Golden Tornado of Georgia Tech to its first victory of the '24 season at Grant Field yesterday, when Oglethorpe was beaten, 19 to 0.

The offensive was between Wycoff and Adrian Maurer, speedy captain and halfback of the Stormy Petrels. As they were able to gain, so was the score sure to be. Wycoff hammered, plunged, pounded and battered the Oglethorpe line for three, four, five, ten yard gains and punted to Oglethorpe's 10 and 20-yard lines time after time. Maurer tried his hand at the same kind of work, but where Wycoff had pushed through a fairly good defense, Maurer failed against 11 Yellow Jackets set and ready for him.

Both teams were fighting an uphill battle, with the mud and water on the field giving them insecure footing and keeping the ball slippery as an eel.

Tech made six first downs at the expense of Oglethorpe, while the Petrels were unable to score a single first down against the Tornado.

Petrels Hold.

During the first half Tech wasn't able to get away for a touchdown, but did snatch five points from the Peachtree road outfit by a safety and placement kick goal from the 32-yard. Tech was always threatening the Oglethorpe goal line, but didn't have the steam to push it over, especially on the wet field. The safety came in the first quarter, with the placement kick in the second.

Clay Parrish snapped badly to Maurer, who was ready to punt from Oglethorpe's 10-yard line, and Maurer was tackled by Poole, center, and Joe Usry, guard, behind the posts for the first two points. Dan Williams kicked the placement goal in the second quarter.

Tech went scoreless in the third quarter, but in the final period broke loose for two touchdowns, adding a point after each.

Wycoff Makes Touchdown.

The first touchdown went over on straight football. Steady driving, with Wycoff doing most of it, from Oglethorpe's 18-yard line carried the ball to Oglethorpe's 5-yard line for a first down. Wilton, quarterback, smashed through left tackle for two yards. Bob Reeves failed to gain, and Wycoff, the player responsible for the first down, was sent up to score. He did. He hit left tackle and when the pile of yellow and black jerseys was separated the ball was over.

Williams gained the extra point after touchdown by a placement kick.

Tech scored its second touchdown just before the end of the game. Oglethorpe had the ball on its own 20-yard line. One-yard gains by Maurer and Kilgore weren't taking the ball out of dangerous territory and a pass was signalled. Carroll, Oglethorpe end, took it, but lost it Connally, Tech's substitute fullback, before it touched the ground, and Connally sped across 20 yards for the final touchdown. Angley kicked for the extra point.

Petrels Use Few Tricks.

Only a few times did Oglethorpe resort to tricks and then it was only when the Petrels were desperate. The Peachtree road outfit tried a fake kick or two and failed. It tried a double pass that came near being good, but Maurer fumbled and the ball went to Tech.

Captain George Gardner, of the Tornado, was hurt early in the first quarter, but was able to walk off the field. Mack Tharpe, scrub last year, went in at right tackle and played a game that, if continued, will land him in a regular berth easily next year. Tharpe was through the line of scrimmage repeatedly to nail his man, and when more than one broke through to snag a Petrel, Tharpe was one of them.

Joe Usry stepped out and did some pretty tackling on his own account. He was breaking up one play after another for the Petrels all the time he was in the game.

Gus Merkle, speedy end of the Tornado, a tackle last year, did as much, if not more than Joe Usry in breaking up Oglethorpe formations, with Maurer carrying the ball.

Substitutes Sent In.

In the last quarter, with a safety, a placement kick goal and a touchdown against a round nothing, the Tech coaches sent in half a dozen substitutes, who carried the colors of Tech over the Petrel line once more. Cooper, left tackle, and Bob Nix, looking after the right flank, were the centers of the Oglethorpe defense. Repeatedly they broke up formations to make the Tornado look like a gentle spring zephyr. Clay Parrish played a nice defensive game at center, but his bad snaps when the ball was dangerously near the Petrel goal line showed he needs considerable practice in this business.

Wycoff, the offensive figure of the Tech outfit, was also the star of the defense in the punting business. He did most of his work for the Tornado and the Tornado's punts averaged 48 yards. Nutty Campbell, speedy little quarter of the Petrels, did all of the Oglethorpe punting and averaged 32 yards.

SPORT SPECULATION

by George Congdon

A Lesson for Tech.
Work Well Done.
Nation Breathes Easily.

IT'S a good thing these first football games of the season are as they are—traditional meetings with traditional results. Tech beats Oglethorpe, Georgia beats Mercer, Auburn beats Birmingham-Southern, Alabama beats Union. There isn't much danger of one of the youngsters jumping up and slapping over one of the old gran'pop teams like Tech, Georgia, Auburn and Alabama.

The Stormy Petrels of Oglethorpe, however, gave Tech supporters one of their biggest scares in years for some thing like 35 or 40 minutes yesterday afternoon. The game ended as it should have, 13 or 19 or 24-or-so to 0 for Tech, but the Tornado had a heck of a time turning the trick.

TECH coaches have a whale of a job facing them. The Tornado, frankly, didn't look good. It had a few bright spots. For instance, Doug Wycoff would look like a million dollars in any football company. Joe Usry played well; so did Mack Tharpe on the other side of the line. Gus Merkle and Monk Nabell worked nicely and there wasn't anything the matter with Bob Reeves or Ivan Williams individually.

The Tech coaches have material in their hands, but they are going to have to mould it into a smooth-running machine before a week passes, or——. Tech's defense is organized. It presented an impregnable wall to the Petrels yesterday and will offer the same kind of resistance to a much stronger eleven. Where Tech lacks teamwork is in the drive, the push, the power to knock holes in an opposing line. Five points only were scored in the first half. Tech would do well to forget the last half and go to work on the defects that showed in the first two periods.

BOBBY Jones at last feels the weight of the national amateur golf crown on his brow. None can say he didn't play the best golf of the tournament. All of which goes to prove that the description once given Jones, that of being the most consistent star golfer of the world, hits the nail on the head.

Bobby Jones turned the golfing world upset down by the scores by which he defeated his opponents. We'll leave the first and second round fellows out. Then look at that victory over Francis Ouimet, admittedly one of the world's best. It was 11 up and 10 to play. Then Von Elm, the pride of the Pacific coast—defeated 9 up and 8 to play. Bobby went gunning for the national amateur many years before he won it, but when he did, it was by the most decisive scores in championship tournament play in more than a century.

SEVERAL million people heaved big, luscious sighs of relief yesterday when the Senators finally clinched the American league pennant to buckle down to work with the Giants October 4 for a world baseball championship. Of course, the Yankees by winning both of their games, while the Senators lose both of theirs, can tie the Washington club. That isn't likely, though.

The Senators had the moral support of the nation behind them. New Yorkers would liked to have seen the present world champions win again, but we doubt if all of them were in that frame of mind. Of course the main thing with Washington winning the American league rag is granting Walter Johnson his last wish—that he pitch in a world-series game.

PANTHERS WIN, 11-3, FROM CHICKS

Fort Worth, Texas, September 27. (By the Associated Press.)—By an avalanche of base hits, including five home runs, the Fort Worth Panthers, three times Dixie champions, celebrated their first appearance on their home lot in the present series by storming their way to a 11 to 3 win over the Memphis Chickasaws, champions of the Southern association.

The victory today reduces the Memphis lead to one game, making the count in games two to one in favor of Memphis.

The hero of the day was Paul Wachtel, the spitball artist of the Fort Worth club, who has been barred from using his freak delivery on the Memphis field. He made his vengeance sweet today, allowing the Chicks only six hits and being in trouble in just one inning, the sixth, when the Southern leaguers bunched a single and a double with a walk, an error and a sacrifice fly for three runs.

McGrew Weakens.

Slim McGrew, the right-handed pitching ace of the Memphis team, started the game with two strikeouts in the first inning, but in the second, the Panthers found their batting eyes, and before McGrew could be withdrawn, five runs had trickled across the plate, a lead the Memphis team never overcame.

Kelly, the relief pitcher, did not do any better for four of the five home runs were made off his delivery.

Palmer opened the Fort Worth second with a fly out to first. Eddington and Tavener were walked in succession, followed by Bischoff's double into the left field stands, Eddington scoring. Watchel hit a high fly to right center which caromed off of Barber's leg and rolled into the right field stands for a double, Tavener and Bischoff scoring. Calvo, the Cuban centerfielder of the Panthers, then registered the first home run of the series with a blow over the right field stands scoring Wachtel.

McGrew was withdrawn in favor of Kelly, but Phelan singled and Sears doubled, scoring Phelan. Kraft struck out and Palmer ended the winning inning with a fly to center, his second out of the inning.

Memphis Threatens.

Memphis' one threat came in the sixth when Protho walked, Carlyle singled and Yaryan doubled, scoring Prothro. Smith, the hero of the Memphis games, went out second to first, but Anderson was safe on Phelan's error, Carlyle scoring and Yaryan going to third. He scored on Lamotte's sacrifice fly to Edington, Kelly ending the rally with an out.

Sears hit two of the five homers, one in the fourth, with none on and the other in the sixth with one on. Edington hit a homer in the third inning and Palmer hit for the circuit in the sixth, the third run for Fort Worth in the inning.

Kraft, the home run king of the minor leagues, struck out on each of his five trips to the plate.

DONAGHEE WINS HANDICAP RACE

Havre De Grace, Md., September 27.—Jim Bean's Donaghee swept the field in the $10,000 Potomac handicap, feature of today's card here. On his toes as the barrier was sprung, Donaghee jumped into the lead and was never headed. W. S. Kilmer's Sunayr was second and A. H. Morris' Rustic, a heavy favorite, was pocketed at the break and could never get out, finishing third.

Gold Bug also ran. Thomasine was scratched out of the original field of five, one of the poorest entry lists to figure in a Maryland stake race in a long time. Two dollar mutuals paid the winner $15.90. The time was 1:46 1-5.

HUTCHISON LOW AT TOURNAMENT

St. Louis, September 27.—Jock Hutchison, the veteran Chicago professional, was low in the first thirty-six holes of the Missouri open golf tournament which opened on the St. Louis Country club course today. Hutchison broke a course record in the morning when he made the eighteen holes in 67, two strokes better than the record made by Francis Ouimet, Boston amateur, in 1921. He finished this afternoon with 73 for 140 for the 36 holes.

BLACK GOLD IN TOP FORM

Latonia, Ky., September 27.—Black Gold reached top form today when he came from last place to win the sixth race on the Latonia card today by defeating Colonel Labold. The black son of Black Toney and Useseit was breaking easy as he breezed across the finish line after the mile run.

Brilliant Atlanta Golfer Takes Crown by Defeating Von Elm, 9 Up, 8 to Play

Big Welcome Planned For Bobby at 5 P. M.

Bobby Jones, conqueror of all his opponents in the the national amateur golf tournament just ended, will arrive in Atlanta at 5 o'clock this afternoon at Brookwood station. All who like golf or a champion are asked to help in his welcome.

Frank Roman, director of Georgia Tech's band, issued a call last night for every member of the band to meet him at Brookwood station at 5 o'clock to "welcome home our alumni member and newly-crowned American amateur golf champion."

BY HOMER GEORGE.

Merion Cricket Club, Ardmore, Pa., September 27.—(Special.)—The most consistently super-fine golfer the world has ever known came into his own here today when Bobby Jones—Robert Tyre Jones, Jr., doesn't sound right—of Atlanta, won the national amateur championship. He came into his title by his spectacular defeat this afternoon of George von Elm, Los Angeles, nine up and eight to play.

Never in the history of the cup competition has a victory been so popular and the ovation given the new titleholder was so lastingly enthusiastic that it set Bobby to blushing from the pleasure of it. Madly the 15,000 spectators cheered and stormed forward to extend congratulations, fighting one another to get close to Bobby; to glimpse his sturdy form and to shake his hand.

Fitting it is that Bobby was held back until this week, for it was on this same course that he made his first stab for national honors in 1916 when, as a kid of 14 years, he struck the old-timers dumb with his great play and went to the third round, where the then magnificent Bob Gardner stopped him by a phenomenal round of golf. This year Bobby has swept the field aside as if it had been chaff.

Certain of Title.

No championship has ever been won so decisively and no champion has ever shown his certainty of victory from qualifying round to final. No golfer has ever shown such startling superiority over a field of great players as Bobby exhibited in this tournament. His play at all times was so remarkable that it carried the handwriting on the wall. It would have been a calamity beyond conception had he lost at any time. He completely overshadowed the field and his march was triumphant beyond imagination.

No golfer since 1895, when C. B. McDonald of Chicago beat C. E. Sands, of St. Andrews, by a score 12 to 11, has won a championship by such a wide margin. And never in the history of American competition has such a field been in the race as there was this year. From all parts of the world the pick of amateurs journeyed here and 166 of them started with the 32 qualifiers standing as wonder golfers. Head and shoulders above these 32 stood Bobby and all are as one in acclaiming him the greatest of all.

Eight years he has been in the hunt for the amateur title and for at least six of these he has been the pick of those who studied class. But always fortune smiled on some one else until back to Merion where he started came Bobby. From start to finish Bobby took fate in his own hands to play the most wonderful golf in the history of championships. And so the victory was wrought.

Finish Spectacular.

Always consistent, always right around par, Bobby stepped surely forward to the very last shot which he made, a shot thousands present pronounced the greatest single shot of the tournament. It was a pitch to the tenth green over a yawning trap with the pin just a few feet from the edge of the deep sand. It was a shot which required the skill and nerve of the master shot-maker. But Bobby made it so perfectly and so easily, the ball running to four feet of the hole, that it looked easy. And when Von Elm missed his putt for a 3, he held out his hand for congratulations to Bobby and the crowd burst forth with resounding applause.

Starting with second in the qualifying round by scoring 144 for the 36 holes, Bobby marched forward as one inspired. The Canadian champion, W. J. Thompson, fell first, 6 to 5. Then came the hardest match of the championship, that against P. Clarke Corkran, low medalist and seemingly the man for the runaway. But he fell, 3 and 2, after which Rudy Knepper was eliminated, 6 and 4. Then came Francis Ouimet, a former amateur and open champion, who bit the dust, 11 and 10. Following this, the finals with Von Elm passing out of the picture, 9 and 8.

It was masterful golf from start to finish—golf played with such sureness and finish that the doom of all was sighted early in the proceedings.

Receives Trophy.

Following the end this afternoon, Bobby was called before the packed thousands which scrambled for points of vantage, and was presented the championship trophy and gold medal emblematic of championship by Wynant D. Vanderpool, president of the United States Golf association, who paid the highest compliments to the winner and his sportsmanship. The runner-up medal was presented to George Von Elm, while the semi-final medals went to Max Marston and Francis Ouimet. Cameras clicked and photographers made picture after picture. The crowd yelled for a speech from Bobby, but he smilingly waved aside the request and bowed his thanks. His long quest was over and he felt too deeply to make a speech.

The play today drew a tremendous but well-behaved gallery. Bobby started off by losing the first hole. His drive was in the edge of the rough and his pitch trapped. He was on in three but missed his putt while Von Elm sank for a four.

Bob squared the match on the second with a birdie four made possible by a fine run up from the edge of the green, where his second stopped.

The third was also his when Von Elm sliced into the rough and missed a 15-foot putt for a three, which Bobby easily made.

On the fourth both were off with their pitches and then George laid Bobbie a stymie. Bob lost the hole, 7 to 6.

The fifth and sixth were halved, Bob laying George a stymie on the latter.

Bob Two Up at Turn.

Bob won the seventh with a par four when Von Elm missed a six-footer which would have been a half.

The eighth also went to Bob when George sliced his second and had to take a 5 while Bob was down in par 4. They halved the ninth to turn with Bob two up. He shot a 39 going out while George had taken a 42.

They halved the tenth in par fours, but Bob won the eleventh with a birdie three, sinking an eight-foot putt.

The twelfth was halved in par 4, but Bobby lost the thireenth when his second landed in a trap and he was short with his explosion shot.

They halved the fourteenth and Bob won the fifteenth when Von Elm missed a ten-footer for a par 4 after his mashie pitch had been trapped.

The sixteenth also went to Bob when he ran a long, long putt dead for a par 4 while George was short with his aproach putt and missed his next.

They halved the seventeenth and eighteenth, and the round ended with Bob four up. Bob shot a 74 against a 79 for Von Elm.

In the afternoon both missed par on the first but Von Elm lost when he was charged with a stroke because his ball moved as he addressed it.

The second went to Bob with a birdie 4 due to a fine approach from the edge of the green.

The third, fourth and fifth were halved, but on the sixth Bob went seven up by getting a par 4 when George missed a ten-footer for a half.

The seventh ended with Bob eight up. Here Von Elm sliced his drive to the end of the rough and put his second across the green in a deep trap. He overran the green into heavy rough and missed his first attempt to get out, shooting the next across the green and conceding the hole to Bob, whose second was 12 feet from the pin.

Bob Four Feet From Pin.

The eighth was halved in par 4, but on the ninth, Bob went 9 up with 9 to go.

On the tenth, a 333-yard hole with the tee from back in the woods, each got fine drives, though George had an open pitch for the green while Bob was back of a deep pit in the rough. Von Elm was away and ran up 15 to 20 feet away. Bob looked at that trap and then pitched right over it, the ball stopping four feet from the flag. Von Elm was dormie and only a birdie three could carry the match further, so he studied his putt carefully, gave it all the chance it needed, but missed, going over eight feet. Bob needed only a half, with two putts to make it; so Von Elm stretched out his hand, removed his cap and congratulated the new champion.

Following the exercises of presentation, and dinner, Bobby packed his clubs and left Philadelphia on the 8:13 train, which is due to arrive at Brookwood station in Atlanta at 5:25, Atlanta time, Sunday. Thomas B. Paine and others of the Atlanta delegation will accompany him home with his medals and trophies.

BOBBY JONES.

Name of Jones on Amateur Trophy Overdue---Pegler

BY WESTBROOK PEGLER.

Merion Cricket Club, Haverford, Pa., September 27.—The name of Jones was etched on the fat bulb of the National Amateur golf cup, a big shiny trophy surmounted by cupids and garlands and generally resembling a wedding cake, when Bobby Jones, of Atlanta, won the championship along toward evening of this gray Saturday by defeating George Von Elm, of Utah, 9 up and eight to play.

The name of Jones was long overdue in that directory of great golfers which is tattooed on the bulging tummy of the cup, for Bobby had been shooting the kind of golf that wins championships for several years, only to wobble or fetch up in the quick-sands of misfortune when he went into the national tournament.

Eight years ago when he was a boy of 14, Jones came to the deep-tangled wildwoods and caverns of the golf course wearing long trousers so that he would look older, and played through to the third round. One of the golfers who got in the way of little Bobby's flailing tools in that historic tournament was Eben Byers, a man who had held the title, and when Byers went out and Bobby went on to the next round, Bobby became one of those athletic boy wonders. The kid of 1916 was not through yet, however, for he demonstrated that he was no fluke celebrity by defeating Frank Dyer the next day, although Dyer had him five down in the first six holes. In the third round Bob Gardner quelled the juvenile divot carver, but it was too late then to reduce him to obscurity again.

Hunch it Was Bob's Year.

It was only a matter of time until Bobby should win the national amateur championship and as a matter of fact, Bobby and his rooters down in Atlanta had no idea it would be such a long time. The coffee-colored, suncured people in rainbow socks and sweaters who follow all the big tournaments up and down the railroads, from New Hampshire to Los Angeles and from Oregon to Florida, seemed to have a hunch that 1924 was Bobby Jones' year last Monday when he turned in the runner-up card in the qualifying round. Jones not only was really on his game in the national amateur for the first time in his life, but for the first time the breaks were not going to his adversaries. He wasn't getting the breaks himself, you understand, but nobody was holing tee shots against him. For his own part Jones was shooting a game of Scotch hockey that bore a strong family resemblance to

ORGANIZE POLO TEAM AT FORT

The officers of the Twenty-second infantry at Fort McPherson met Friday afternoon and organized the Twenty-second infantry polo team for the coming season. All officers, those on active duty, those who are retired of the regular army and those of the national guard and of the officers' reserve corps who are interested in polo have been invited to become members of this club. Much interest is being shown in polo and the Twenty-second infantry has some good ponies as well as some good players. Practice games will start as soon as the parade ground becomes dry enough from the recent hard rains.

Colonel Dwight W. Ryther was elected as president, and Lieutenant Lloyd V. H. Durfee was made secretary and treasurer. Major Martin C. Shallenberger was elected as field manager. Newly elected members who were present were Colonel Paul Giddings, Major H. J. Keeley, Lieutenant J. T. Treywick, Lieutenant L. C. Berry, Lieutenant Samuel G. Keilsmeyer, Lieutenant D. M. Moore, Lieutenant George E. Bruner, Lieutenant Loren F. Parmley, Lieutenant Percy E. Hunt and Lieutenant C. E. Henry.

L. S. U. WINNER BY ONE POINT

Baton Rouge, La., September 27.—(Special.)—Springhill college held the Louisiana State eleven to the close score of 7 to 6 here Saturday afternoon in the first game of the season.

It was a bitterly-fought game, with Bill Pitcher's dropkick for the goal after touchdown proving to be the margin of victory. Seven fumbles tell the tale of the Tiger failure, six of these miscues coming when the Tigers had the ball deep in Hillian territory.

Added to this was the superb work of the Springhill college line which held the vaunted Tiger attack from registering previous touchdowns. The Tigers showed their offensive power by registering 19 first downs, while the Hillians made only four.

Birmingham-Southern Holds Auburn to 7-0 Score

Upsets Dope In Thrilling Contest

Birmingham, Ala., September 27.—(Special.)—A fighting eleven and a gambling coach thrilled ten thousand fans and opened Munger bowl in a most auspicious manner Saturday afternoon. Auburn defeated the Gold and Black eleven, 7 to 0, and carried their aspirations of great victories and worlds to convey back to their hotel rooms to ponder over. Never before in the history of the Methodist institution has the Panther held the Tiger so nearly even.

Students, who looked for nothing better than a 21 to 0 score, as all dopesters figured the game, were wildly cheering until late in the evening over the Panthers' great showing. Players went crying to the college gymnasium murmuring, "we should have won.

Only for the great wizardry of Auburn's forward passing machine and their first-half playing, the Panthers may have overwhelmed dope entirely. The Gold and Black eleven clearly outplayed Auburn in the second half and made three first downs to Auburn's two. The longest runs of the game were made by Birmingham-Southern men. The longest completed pass was made by a Birmingham-Southern passer to a Birmingham-Southern end. Certainly the Tiger felt the claws of the Panther Saturday.

Southern's Stars.

There were no two players on the football field Saturday who stood out more than two orange-coated Panthers. Turner Scott and Curly Black played the greatest games of any player in the contest. They stood head and shoulders over the field. Scott, playing a tackle, was through the line time and time again and getting his man. He was tackling, going down under punts, stopping end runs and even tried to catch a pass. Though ineligible, he played the best game of any lineman seen at Munger bowl in many years and was the man who time after time stopped the rushes of the Tigers. With another man equal to Scott on the right side of the Panther line it is very probable the story would have been different.

As for Black, his game was supersensational. Backing up the line Black made more tackles than any man on the field. When the Tigers broke through it was Black who stopped them and it was Black who seldom missed his man. At punting the versatile Panther back got off some very creditable kicks which pulled the Panthers out of tight holes many times. At passing Black hurled the ball straight and true and one of them fell into hands of Joe Whiteside for a gain of 28 yars. It was Black who made the prettiest run of the day, a gain of 27 yards off left tackle. It was a beautiful piece of broken field running.

Tigers Score Early.

The Tigers made their score early in the game. The Tigers kicked off and after a try at the line Black punted to midfield. Here the Plainsmen took the ball and started a drive which was stopped when Peterson fumbled and Malloy recovered. On the second down Black fumbled and Grisham recovered for Auburn. Then Williams and Turner bucked the ball down the field for first down on four tries. Green threw a pass to Peterson for 15 yards which placed the ball on the Panther 30-yard line.

Williams took three over left tackle and followed with five more through the same hole. Turner made six through center and the ball was on the Panther 17-yard line. Greene made three smashes at left tackle for seven yards, placing the ball on Southern's 10-yard line. The Panthers were penalized five yards for off-side and the ball was on the five-yard line. Turner made one yard and the next play failed. Turner went through left tackle for four yards and a touchdown. Peterson drop-kicked the goal from touchdown.

Strong Alabama Offense Piles Up 55 to 0 Victory

University, Ala., September 27.—(Special.)—Showing a powerful offensive combination, Alabama defeated Union university here this afternoon by a 55-0 score in the opening game of the season. Approximately 5,000 persons witnessed the game.

Little doubt existed as to the winner of the contest after the first Crimson play. It netted a touchdown, Grant Hillis sweeping around right end for 35 yards for a touchdown. The Crimsons scored two other touchdowns in this quarter, added three more in the second quarter and two more in the fourth quarter.

It was Johnny Mack Brown, halfback, who received the praise of Joe Guyon, former Georgia Tech star, after the game. "This Brown boy is good. Watch him later in the season," said Guyon.

Brown Goes Good.

Brown displayed one of the greatest exhibitions of open-field running seen in many years at Denny field. His sidestepping was almost perfect, his change of pace and his receiving of passes good.

Brown raced 75 yards on Parker's punt for a touchdown at the opening of the third quarter. A few moments later he returned another of Parker's punts for 46 yards and a touchdown. In the fourth quarter, he received a 15-yard pass from Gillis and ran 55 yards through a mass of players for a touchdown.

Brown was not the only Crimson back who showed promise for later games. Hubert, Gillis and Barnes, all veterans of last year, gave the Union secondary players all the work they wanted. Salmon, Rosenfeld, Winsless, Cohen and Hussey also showed their speed and line plunging.

Flanks Well Protected.

Alabama's flank problem was well taken care of by McClintock and Caldwell, who both did good work in today's game. They allowed few gains around their wings and smeared passes and caught passes galore. Caldwell was used as defensive halfback and offensive end.

Union was outweighed about 15 pounds to the man and was clearly outclassed by the heavier Crimsons. They displayed a good passing combination in Parker and Stewart, but were never able to penetrate far beyond the line of scrimmage. Their four first downs came from passes.

Alabama made 14 first downs. The Crimsons punted twice, Gillis punting once for 46 yards and McClintock once for 32 yards.

Alabama's front ranks did not remain the same long enough for any one man to stand out as the backslide. Compton, Langhorne and Jones started well, and gave way to Perry, Ennis and Camp, who continued the work. The Alabama linemen smeared plays continually, many back of the line of scrimmage.

For Union, the work of Harris at a flank berth and Dodds and Mercer featured.

N. CAROLINA STATE BEATS TRINITY

Raleigh, N. C., September 27.—(Special.)—Staging a mighty rally in the second half, after being completely outplayed during the first two periods, North Carolina State defeated Trinity, 14 to 0, here this afternoon in the opening game of the season.

With a baffling shift and brilliant open field running by Reitzel, a substitute quarterback, the Methodist Blue Devils threw a scare into the Wolfpack, who instead of finding comparatively easy sailing with the protegees of Howard Jones, shortly after the initial kickoff was fiercely snarling in defense of its own territory.

In the last two quarters the big Maroon team began to find itself. With Johnston and Walter Shuford clipping off the necessary yardage, the pack rammed over two touchdowns and Lassiter added the extra points with field goals.

HOMECOMING THIS WEEK AT AUBURN

BY ERNEST SIZEMORE.

Auburn, Ala., September 27.—(Special.)—An interesting sidelight to the annual Auburn Tiger-Clemson Tiger football game which is to be staged on Drake field in Auburn Saturday afternoon, October 4, is the alumni home-coming. Plans were laid at the annual meeting of the Alumni association held during the commencement exercises last spring.

Reports coming in from many sections of the state and adjoining states indicate that alumni of the Alabama Poly are planning to participate in the pilgrimage to their alma mater next Saturday, and probably the largest crowd ever assembled at an athletic event on the Plains will put in its attendance next week-end at the loveliest village to witness the Tiger-Tiger set-to. It has been learned here that numerous automobile parties, as well as others coming by rail, will journey to the scene of the big gtid conflict from Montgomery, Birmingham, Atlanta, Columbus, Dothan, Troy, Selma and other towns within a large radius of Auburn.

There have been a number of homecomings from time to time of the sons of Auburn, but the get-together on the fourth probably marks the first to be held in the fall during the football season. According to Judge William H. Samford, of Montgomery, president of the Auburn Alumni association, the occasion will probably be pointed to each autumn when a prominent football team will be invited to the Plains to meet the Orange and Blue eleven.

The Auburn-Clemson games apparently have become annual affairs, with the games alternating between the two campuses. On the last two trips to the Carolina institution the games have been witnessed by large numbers of Clemson alumni at their annual visitation.

Auburn-Clemson games date back for more than a quarter of a century, and while the two teams have not met each year, a number of interesting grid encounters have been staged by the two teams.

The victories won favor the Plainsmen, but it is said by old residents that on one or two occasions in the past the Clemsonites have trounced the Tiger by good scores. Last year the game was played on the Clemson campus and resulted in a 0-to-0 tie after one of the fiercest battles to be played by the two teams.

Reports emitting from the mountaineers' camp have it that the Carolinians are priming for two objectives, the predominating one being to snatch a victory from the other Tiger while the other is to win the South Carolina championship.

Local alumni at Auburn are busy on the details of the home-coming day. To date a banquet has been arranged for all alumni in attendance to be held at 1 p. m. at the Students' club, and it is understood that reserve sections of the stands at Drake field will be provided during the game in the afternoon.

Rice Crosses Ga. Line For Bears

BY MARCUS BRYANT.

Athens, Ga., September 27—(Special.)—Upsetting the predictions of the "wise boys," and dashing the hope of the entire Mercer student body and a good many of the supporters of the Baptist college who made the trip with the team, Georgia's Bulldog, though handicapped by a soggy field and minus the services of its captain, cut, ripped, tore, smashed and hurled its way to a 26-to-7 victory over the Mercer Bears Saturday afternoon in the opening game of the 1924 gridiron season.

Hopes a Mercer had been high, wonderfully high right up to the referees' whistle. Indeed, the Bears did not lose hope when the Georgia machine, playing like veterans, began the attack on the Orange and Black. The Bears fought valiantly all the way and played great ball.

Fully 5,000 fans who braved the meanest of drizzles and biting misty rain were amply repaid for their trouble as they saw the Bulldog, maddened by the temerity of the visitors in daring to predict victory, marca down the field with the tenacity and grim, relentless way of the Bulldog, to the shadow of the goal and over.

Cross Goal Line.

Going down in defeat bravely, Mercer hearts and players probably find consolation in the fact that the Red and Black goal line was crossed for the first time in 14 years. To Dave Rice, Mercer backfield ace, goes this honor. It was in 1910, when Mercer last scored on the Georgians, the game resulting in an 8-to-5 loss for Mercer.

The condition of the field permitted very little football other than the straight, plugging type, but both elevens showed that they can play that game as well as the open game, the forward pass and the rest of the plays that bring the spectators' hearts into their throats. However, there were features that shone forth through the coating of mud that covered the field and the players, and Saturday night the short-haired freshmen were getting their first taste of a Georgia victory and learning to shout the names of their heroes, Taylor, Thompson, Butler, Thomason and others.

Georgia had the best of the battle in the initial period, with Mercer playing a brand of ball in the second quarter which could not be denied, and resulted in their score. The last half of the game found both elevens battling on practically even terms.

Kilpatrick Scores First.

"Buster" Kilpatrick, field general of the Bulldogs, made a scintilating run of 50 yards in the opening period of the game for the first touchdown. This run was one of the outstanding features of the game and the Red and Black quarter eluded every would-be tackler. This sprint was a splendid exhibition of running in a broken field and the interference was beautiful. Randall's effort to kick goal was unsuccessful.

Later in the first quarter the Red and Black tallied again. Jim Taylor broke through the Mercer line and blocked a punt, recovering on Mercer's 46-yard line. A brilliant offense, led by "Teanny" Randall, carried the oval within striking distance of the chalked line and Randall pushed the pigskin over. Randall's kick from placement added the extra point.

Holding the Georgia attack in check for the second quarter, Mercer rallied and with a determined drive swept the Georgians off their feet. Carrying the ball deep into Georgia's territory, the Bears were held and the ball went over. A 15-yard penalty, with the determined drive carried the ball to the six-yard line and Dave Rice scored the lone Baptist touchdown.

Fumble Is Costly.

Cecil's fumble paved the way for the third Georgia score. "Smack" Thompson recovered the fumble and carried the ball to the Bears' two-yard line, where he was forced out of bounds. J. D. Thomason carried the oval over on the next play, but Randall failed again to kick goal.

George Morton, graduate from last year's frosh outfit, played the important role in the final touchdown. Being injected in the game late, he carried the ball over after an eight-yard run around Mercer's right flank. Several nice runs were made by him, one being for 15 yards at this stage of the game. Morton kicked the goal after touchdown.

"Smack" Thompson and Jim Taylor played great ball for Athens in the forward wall. These two were in the thickest of the fight at all times and deserve much credit. "Big Six" Luckey and Armand Mapp, seeing their first varsity duty, also displayed good ball, the latter getting off some nice punts. Jake Butler and J. D. Thomason shone in the backfield. Thomason, shifted from end showed great promise, gaining neatly when called upon. "Scrappy" Moore's punting featured.

Captain "Red" Simmons will long be remembered for his game Saturday. Until the final period his work shone out above the remainder of his team, he having to be replaced on account of injuries.

"Slue" Dunn Rice, "Consuello" Smith and "Rusty" Lawrence come in for lots of the credit for their teams showing. Lawrence proved a star in the Bear attack and handled his team in excellent fashion. Next Saturday the Bulldogs play South Carolina here.

TECH MUST BUILD INTERFERENCE, SAYS STATON

:: Snatches of Action From Tech Victory Over Petrels From Oglethorpe ::

Show of Defensive Power Is Most Gratifying Result Of Game With Oglethorpe

BY JOHN STATON.

Tech won the Oglethorpe game yesterday, 19-0—which was expected. Oglethorpe at intervals opened up its bag of tricks, which was also expected.

In spite of the soggy condition of the field, the teams played in such a manner as to give a fairly good idea of what their season's goal will be. The Tech team yesterday looked much like the one of 1923, a whole lot of defense and not so much offense. Of course either team could not open up its play successfully.

Oglethorpe, suffering heavily under the wet field, had little or no offensive driving power. Adrian Maurer made several long runs, but unfortunately they were mostly parallel to the goal lines. Further, the Tech defense was piling up the Petrel line consistently. Oglethorpe simply could not move the Tech forwards out of the way sufficiently to open up a hole through which the fleet backs could dash.

End running was absolutely impossible. In the first place, the Tech ends were able to hold their feet against the onslaught of Petrel interference. Second, the Tech sidebacks held entirely too well to permit any long gains on the part of the Oglethorpe backs.

Defense Strong.

Tech defensively made a very satisfactory showing yesterday. Most noticeable was the return of Joe Usry to his 1922 form. Joe was a bit off all last season and did not show up to good advantage in many games. But he was there yesterday, slinging Oglethorpe men all over the field, and clogging up many a play with his weight and brawn.

If Tech can improve consistently in her defensive play as the season wears on, even Penn State and Notre Dame will have to do some super-fine driving to cross Tech's goal line.

Offensively, it was the same old story—Doug Wycoff over and over again. He was the same colorful player of a year ago, only showing in his manner and carriage the results of a year's experience. His line driving was up to average and his smashes off tackle on a tangent were superb. Defensively, he contributed largely to keeping the Petrels from registering a first down.

The Tech interference was a bit spotty. In wedge formation, when driving into the center of the line, the boys took their men well and enabled the runner many times to break through clean. But on the ends runs, the interference experienced considerable difficulty in knocking the defensive side backs off their feet.

Offensive Power Should Gain.

That will improve as the season advances. Most gratifying is the fact that the defense is working nicely and the offense shows signs of being powerful before the season closes.

Oglethorpe nearly got away with a very neat trick in the latter part of the game. It was a forward pass, double pass, worked far in their own territory. A backfield man received the ball and forward passed it to a waiting end, who in turn wheeled and passed it backward to an oncoming back. Unfortunately the last man to handle the ball fumbled it and Tech recovered, scoring a little later as a direct result of this recovery. Oglethorpe tried another pass later on, but it was intercepted by Connally for a touchdown. Altogether, Oglethorpe's tricks were Tech's best scoring means.

Tech is right now standing on the threshold of wonderful opportunity. If she develops in one or two phases she will be in a position to take advantage of the glory that would come from playing successfully through such a monster of a schedule.

NAME OF JONES ON TROPHY OVERDUE

perfection, such as, for instance, his last 71 holes of match play, which were encompassed two holes down to par, which is a technical term meaning as follows:

That Bobby was over par only twice more than he was under it in those 71 successive holes of golf.

Von Elm is a calm proposition with a gray-blue eye that gleams with the kindly light of a rifle barrel or the swift descending blade of a sword when he is out there on the veldt playing for a championship. He plays to win, not unfairly, but with a manner that makes his opponents wish someone would tell a moderately funny story to ease the tension of the combat. Of course he is as friendly and merry as the next one, given neither to tittering nor scowling. Von Elm is a lot like Jack Dempsey in this respect, an athlete who swings for a knockout when he goes into action.

Emphasize Nerve Strain.

They see-sawed on the first four holes of the day, Von Elm winning the first, Jones the second, Von Elm the third and Bobby the fourth. They halved the next two and Jones won the seventh from which point on, to the moment of Von Elm's dignified surrender, Jones never relinquished the lead. Von Elm was the first golfer from the Pacific slope that ever reached the final round of the national amateur tournament. They put a lot of emphasis on nerve strain in discussing this game, so maybe the idea that he was doing something that had never been done before finally palsied George's arms.

Anyway, here was a man who had nursed his ball around for a 71, just one stroke worse than perfect golf, during the week, now taking 79 slaps to complete the morning round whereas Jones, with his once stormy temperament well subdued, made it in 74.

On the first green in the afternoon, Von Elm's ball moved as he was addressing it. It was so slight that it almost seemed as if the ball had merely breathed, but George called a stroke on himself, which cost him the hole. The golf people are very chesty about such incidents as this and one of them wants to know if you ever heard of Babe Ruth calling a strike on himself in a world series game.

Jones Penalized Self.

They recall further, that Jones penalized himself the same way in the tournament at Brookline and lost the medal for the low qualifying score by the one stroke. But he also did it in a match with Willie Hunter in St. Louis, which gesture started Hunter away on the winning run that beat Bobby.

Von Elm gave up at the twenty eighth green. Jones was nine up as they drove for this hole. Bobbie's second was about six feet from the well.

Von Elm's second stopped at the margin of the green. He rolled a putt six feet wide of the cup and then stepped forward to take Bobbie's hand. His fighting manner had dropped from him like a—what is it they say?—a cloak? He parted his tanned features in an admiring grin at Jones and said: "Never mind putting that one, Bobbie; I've had plenty."

VANDY LINE AVERAGES 192 LBS.

BY BLINKEY HORN.

Nashville, Tenn., September 27.—(Special.)—If Napoleon were correct in his assumption that divine aid is on the side of the heaviest battalion then the Vandy Commodores have another ally. For there is abundant poundage in the Black and Gold line. From wing to wing there is a preponderance of bulk. The flank to flank average of the Commodore line is 192 pounds, and these figures, of course, are based upon the usual shaving which coaches apply to moleskin poundage.

Fred McKibbon, end, is the real giant of the line, carrying more bulk than Lynn Bomer. The latter, incidentally, is in wobbly physical condition and has only been able to take part in two workouts. He has been suffering from a strained Achilles tendon and his bedraggled condition has caused the coaches much concern. He was released from the doctor's custody too early, it appearing that the practice in which he indulged caused a relapse. Chief anxiety of the coaches is that he may from time to time be afflicted in similar fashion and shorn of the wonderful defensive work of the All-American end. Vandy admittedly, would face the issue in handicapped fashion. At present Bomer is under weight, scaling at 198.

Fatty Lawrence, who is staging a battle with Kenneth Bryan to hold to his regular guard role, weighs 199, which is about seven poands under his normal poundage. He was a victim of a summer setto with pneumonia and has been slow in convalescing. Bryan, who has come along rapidly, weighs in the neighborhood of 190.

Captain Tuck Kelly is the pigmy of the line. He weighs only 173, but his alertness and his fine football mind offsets his lack of proportion to the remaining heavy bulk in the line.

Jim Walker, at one time tackle, is a 187-pounder, while Bob Rives, who by many was favorably mentioned for an All-Southern berth last fall, scales at 193.

Jess Keene, who has replace Alf Sharpe at center, is a mass of bone, who tips the beam at 194.

Of course, there is no such a tremendous poundage back of the line, for with the exception of Tommy Ryan, at full, all the Commodore pigskin packers are inclined to be light. Ryan weighs 172. The deerfooted Gif Reese is below the 155 line as is George Weller, slated for the quarterback role. Hek Wakefield, who this time will again be found in the backfield, according to present coaching plans, weighs 159.

Four Prep Teams To Play on Local Grounds This Week

BY GORDON KEITH.

Out of four games scheduled by prep managers to be played last Friday and Saturday, only one battle was actually fought out in the mud and rain, the Decatur-Covington High game Friday afternoon, which the local team won in easy fashion. Tech High had expected to get under way Saturday against the Commerce High eleven, the game to be played in Athens as a prelim to the Georgia-Mercer game, but the Commerce team canceled the meeting early in the week.

The Smithies were unsuccessful in their efforts to locate other opposition at the late date and were forced to remain idle despite the early training and excellent condition of the team. The University Bluebird outfit was counting strongly on opening their season in a really flashy manner by meeting the Tech freshmen eleven as a preliminary to the Tech-Oglethorpe game, but the freshies canceled the battle the middle of the week.

The other game that was originally on the prep menu was a practice affair between Marist and Commercial High booked for Friday afternoon, but Commercial's team has failed to materialize to any great extent this season and another bit of action was denied local fans. The preps had rotten luck in another field than the weather this week when three of their opponents backed out of their contracts.

Progress Retarded.

Rain and slush has hurt the advancement of the prep machines this last week as much as the college elevens, but the Atlanta coaches seem to have their charges in excellent shape despite the late handicaps and the local clubs will certainly be heard from next week when every one of them swing into action.

This week the fans will have the opportunity of seeing four of the home teams in action, three on Friday afternoon and one Saturday morning. The other two teams play out-of-town games on Friday, one battle in Marietta and the other in Cave Springs.

Friday's list of home games includes a heated argument between Coach Phillips' Bluebirds and the Oglethorpe freshmen aggregation on Hermance field, a spirited fight between the brand-new Boys' High production of Coach Winkler and their visitors, Gordon institute, and a game between the Marist cadet eleven and another out-of-town team, Cornelia High, on the Marist campus. At the same time Friday that these games are in progress in Atlanta, Decatur will be playing their second battle of the season, a game in Marietta with their old rivals, Marietta High; and the wards of Coach Morrow, the G. M. A. cadets, will do battle with another soldier team in Cave Springs, the Hearn Academy aggregation.

Saturday morning the Smithie eleven, product of Coaches Tolbert, Alexander and Kopf, will entertain the Darlington school's football team on Grant field for what promises to be a better battle than was thought possible before practice began.

Tech High Is Strong.

Tech High defeated the Oglethorpe scrub team some ten days ago by a touchdown in a practice game and the university eleven will find a worthy opponent in the first-year team, which, of course, will play many of the scrub team. This game will shed a lot of light on the strength of the team and show just how good the new stars are.

Little is known of the strength of the Cornelia team, but the eleven will certainly be strong enough to make the green Marist team extend itself a bit and show to some extent just how successful Coach Bean has been in developing a new machine from light and inexperienced players.

The Boys' High-Gordon battle should prove one of the best of the early season, for the Barnesville team has always found a lot of rivalry in the Boys' High outfits. Boys' High defeated Gordon last year, but even with playing on home grounds the light purple eleven will do well to win this game.

Decatur, despite losses of old men, will most likely defeat the Marietta eleven as usual, for the performance of Coach Rampley's men Friday would safely justify a more rash prediction.

G. M. A. will have little trouble in their game, but it will help the coaches a lot and show just how much difference to a team the absence of Hearn and the acquiescence of Bailey will make. Tech High will find Darlington a tough nut, but the local eleven should win by a couple of touchdowns in favorable weather.

Boxing Game in U. S. in Hands of Referees

Must Enforce Rules, Says Edgren

BY ROBERT EDGREN.

Professional boxing is not going to last in this country unless referees enforce the rules.

Boxing needs a national commission to pass on the qualifications of referees as well as fighters. Many bouts in the ring are handled by referees who either don't know the rules of boxing or not game enough to enforce them.

As boxing is conducted now in many states a boxer can be suspended for refusing to meet an opponent selected by a commission, or for refusing to go on with a match already arranged. In some rare cases boxers are disciplined for outrageous infractions of the rules that are supposed to govern all boxing contests, but usually so little is thought of this trifling matter that they are soon reinstated.

Seldom Suspended.

Referees are seldom suspended, if ever, and almost invariably the referee is as much at fault as the offending boxer in cases of fouling.

The referee is in entire control of the bout. There is no possibility of continual fouling if a referee does his duty. Any attempt on the part of a boxer to break the rules and strike unfair blows, hold, wrestle or disable his man by use of a trick barred by the rules should result in instant disqualification. In case of an evidently accidental foul the referee should use his judgment and disqualify the offender if the blow might have any effect on the outcome of the contest. In any case the offending boxer should be disqualified if the offense is repeated.

There was better refereeing before there were any state boxing commissions. In the old days the boxers and their managers and the promoters usually selected the referee. A referee who hoped to continue acting as referee had to guard his reputation and be scrupulously fair and impartial. There was a lot of betting on bouts and he had to guard the rights of the public as well as the boxers. The purses were always divided with a winner's and a loser's end, so the referee had to enforce the rules of boxing. Men like George Siler and Charlie White, famous referees years ago, were in great demand as referees in championship contests, because they were known to be fair and fearless. A timid or incompetent referee didn't last long in those days.

No Winner's End.

Today in many instances politicians select the referees. Boxers contract for stated sums for their fights, and there is no loser's end or winner's end. The whole idea is to make the affair a show, like a theatrical performance—a mere entertainment for the crowd.

It is taken for granted that the crowd wants to see a bout go "all the way" unless there is a knockout—wants to "get its money's worth." Consequently there are many boxers who figure just how far they can go in taking unfair advantages in the ring, in breaking the rules; and with most referees that is a long, long way. The referee has his eyes on the bout and his mind on what the crowd will say if he enforces the rules. Perhaps the politician who had him appointed is interested in the promotion. He thinks of that, too.

The last of the old-time referees was Charlie White. Leach Cross and One-Round Hogan met in a New York ring. White gave his instructions. They were to "break clean" at the order of the referee. Both persistently lugged and pounded away in clinches after being ordered to break. White warned them. Used to referees who talked and did nothing, they paid no attention to White's orders. In the middle of the first round White disqualified them both and left the ring. And there was a near-riot. Cross and Hogan were famous knockout artists. The crowd wanted to see knockdowns and a knockout. It had no interest in the rules or White's old-fashioned notion that rules must be enforced. White never refereed another fight. Since his time few referees have the nerve to stop any bout in the early rounds because of fouling.

Villa Hit Late.

In my opinion, the worst case of persistent fouling I've seen in years was at the Wills-Firpo fight in Jersey City. There is a universal rule of boxing against "holding," and no rule of boxing gives a boxer a right to hold with one hand and hit with the other. In every round Wills persistently slipped his left hand under Firpo's right armpit and jerked Firpo in toward him, twisting Firpo's right arm and shoulder to tire him and take the sting out of his right-hand punch. While holding Firpo and pulling him forward Wills drove right-hand blows into his body. Sometimes he held Firpo and twisted him around, and while holding him pounded at his back and kidneys with the right hand. Occasionally he held him and delivered blows to the head, with right or left. Wills has developed a great deal of skill in this trick of holding and hitting, and has been getting away with it for a long time. In England, where boxing rules are enforced, he'd be disqualified in the first round. He should have been disqualified in the first round at Jersey City. Instead, the referee spoke very politely to Wills. It was, "Please, Harry—you're holding," all through the fight.

Pancho Villa wouldn't have become world's flyweight champion if the rules had been strictly enforced. In the first round of his fight with Jimmy Wilde, Villa showed that he outclassed the little Englishman in speed and strength, and that Wilde had little chance to win. However, Wilde walked into Villa, refused to retreat, and stood up to a hard beating. His age showed. He seemed unable to start. Or perhaps he was waiting for a sure opening. Just before the end of the second round Villa was hitting Wilde so fast and hard that it was a wonder he stood up, unwavering. The bell rang. Villa had pulled his right hand back to deliver a swinging blow. He seemed to hesitate. Wilde dropped his hands and half turned toward his corner when Villa suddenly let the right go, landing squarely on the chin. Wilde went down, knocked cold. The blow landed about a second after the bell. Probably Villa didn't hear the bell. Wilde's seconds carried him unconscious, to his corner and worked over him about half a minute before he woke up.

That blow after the bell settled Wilde's chances. He stood up against a terrific battering for five rounds more before he was knocked out. He shouldn't have been sent out for the third round, and he should have been given the decision on a foul, whether the blow was intentionally delivered after the bell or not.

Plenty of Clean Fighters.

Sometimes the referee does enforce the rules. Tom Gibbons, as clean a boxer as I ever saw, was fighting Billy Miske in Madison Square Garden. It was Gibbons' fight. In the tenth round he was pounding at Miske's body, and Billy doubled over. Gibbons raced around and threw in punch after punch. Miske suddenly went down, claiming that he had been hit low. There was a difference of opinion all around the ring, many thinking the blow was fair. But in the referee's judgment it was low, and he disqualified Gibbons and gave Billy the fight, which was the proper thing to do.

I have seen some instances of vicious infractions of the rules that were not punished by the referee. Last spring I saw a Brooklyn middleweight, punched all over the ring by a smaller boxer, pull a trick that fortunately isn't common. He began deliberately spitting in the other man's face every time they came together. The referee did nothing and the crowd made many humorous remarks. Afterward the boxing commission suspended the offender. That action was a little late. A competent referee would have thrown him out of the ring.

No fighter of real class ever fights unfairly. Benny Leonard has been knocked down in several fights, but he never loses his head and never uses unfair tactics. He is a real champion. He is at his fighting best when in danger of being knocked out.

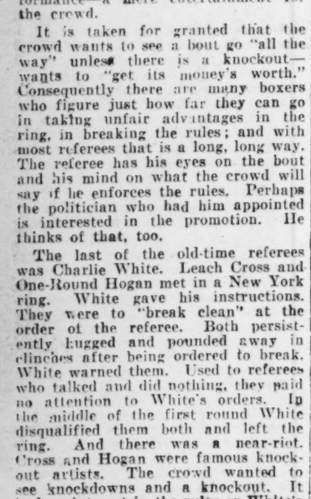

Dempsey Fair Fighter.

Jack Dempsey is another champion who is quick as lightning in action and who never overlooks a chance to finish a contest by fair means. But no one ever saw Jack Dempsey wrestle or hold his man with one hand and pound him with the other, the way Wills does. He's too good a sportsman to try to get around the rules.

Mickey Walker is a very fair boxer, and Gene Tunner is another whose work in the ring is a delight to look at. Of the old-timers Jim Corbett, Bob Fitzsimmons, Jim Jeffries, Sam Langford, Stanley Ketchel, and a hundred others I could name, were clean, fair boxers. In fact, I remember only two or three exceptions to the rule. Perhaps in part this was a matter of education. Referees were in the ring with only one thought in mind—to enforce the rules without thought of any outside influence whatever. Conditions will be the same again if boxing is ever taken out of political control. But perhaps boxing never will be. There is too much money in the game as it is played today.

Winning of Kentucky Stake Honor Coveted by Horsemen

BY W. H. GOCHER.

When Campbell wrote the well-known line, "Coming events cast their shadows before," he was dealing with prophecy and not a forecast on the races. Still it fits admirably when anyone looks over the list of entries for a race meeting.

At Lexington, where the Kentucky Trotting Horse Breeders' association will open its fifty-second annual meeting next Saturday, there are a number of events which many are anxious to win not only on account of their cash value but also the pleasure of having their name added to the lists of winners.

The oldest event is the Kentucky stake for 3-year-old trotters. Dr. Herr won the first one in 1875 with the Mambrino Patchen filly, Girlie E. Queen, in 2:33 1-4. Joe Serrill won the last with Revna Dillon in 2:09. This year the list of eligible candidates includes Colonel Bosworth, 2:02 3-4; Guy Brown, 2:06 1-4; Gloria, a sister to Bunter and Jeane Claire, and Reeswing.

One of them will be added to the list of Kentucky stake winners. It now includes Peter Earl, Faxonian, Colorado E., Soprano, The Abbe, Sadie Mac, Extasy, Bingen, Directum and Director.

The 2 and 3-year-old divisions of the Kentucky Futurity rank second in the matter of age at Lexington. They both date from 1893, when John Goldsmith won the 3-year-old race with Oro Wilkes in 2:14 1-2, and John Payne the 2-year-old division with Nellie A. in 2:23 1-2.

Changes in Records.

Many changes have been made in the records of these events. From year to year the marks were reduced until at present the limit in the 3-year-old race is held jointly by Peter Volo, Lee Worthy, Ethelinda and The Senator with miles in 2:03 1-2.

In the 2-year-old division Native Belle startled the turf world in 1909 by trotting in 2:07 3-4. She reduced Arion's record of 2:10 3-4, which had stood for eighteen years. In 1913 Peter Volo moved the record to 2:04 1-2. This is the best to date.

But seven horses have won both divisions of the Kentucky Futurity. They are Fereno, Grace Bond, Peter Volo, his sister Volga, The Real Lady, Nella Dillon and Rose Scott. This year Mr. McElwyn has a chance to be added to this list. He may, however, find either Guy Richard or Rachel Dillon in the way. The last named showed well at Syracuse. She did not start at Toledo on account of lameness. Guy Richard's races at Cleveland and Readville also show that he must be considered even if he did race a trifle short at Syracuse and Toledo.

The May Day stake is a fixture in which the best 2-year-old trotters meet. It dates from 1922, when it was won by The Senator in 2:06 3-4. Last year Guy Richard won it in the same time. The list of starters includes Sumatra, Aileen Guy, Jean Claire and Lightning Flash. The same youngsters with the addition of Poppy will also appear in the 2-year-old division of the Kentucky Futurity.

The 3-year-old division of the Kentucky Futurity is the blue ribbon event of the trotting turf. It is the last one each year and brings together the best youngsters in training. Its list of winners includes the wonder sire Peter the Great as well as Sadie Mac, Grace, Peter Volo and Volga by him, Siliko and Periscope, one of his get; General Watts, The Harvester, Arion Guy and Lee Worthy.

Doble Won Opener.

In 1889 the Lexington association opened the Transylvania for aged horses on the same plan as the Charter Oak purse at Hartford. Bud Doble won the first two with Jack and McDoel. They were followed by Cheyenne, Kremlin, Harrietta and Azote.

After Bouncer and the gray horse, Senator A. had won this race W. O. Foote dropped in from Texas and won in consecutive years with Rilma and John Nolan. They were followed by Lord Vincent, on which Andy Welch won $15,000 in two bets from Thomas W. Lawson.

Lawson came back to Lexington the following year and won the Transylvania with Boralma. For the next six years the Transylvania resulted in stubborn contests. The winners were Onward Silver, Caspian, Sweet Marie, Ethel's Pride, Nutboy and Sonoma Girl. The last two were owned by Lotta Crabtree.

In 1908 George Estabrooke won with Spanish Queen. She was followed by Penisa Maid. This dainty Iowa product won in 2:04 1-4. Joan, Charley Mitchell, Baden and Cheney followed in the list of winners. In 1914 Geers won with Etawah in 2:03 1-2, a new record for the event.

In 1915 Peter Scott took the Transylvania in his triumphant trip from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast. He was followed by Ima Jay and Binland. The latter cut the record to 2:03 1-4. Prince Loree duplicated it in 1919, while Peter Manning moved it down to 2:02 1-2 the following year. In 1921 Grayworthy won in 2:03 1-2 and Peter the Brewer in 2:02 1-2 in 1922. Rose Scott won last year.

The twenty-ninth renewal of the Walnut Hall cup will be trotted on the first day of the meeting. Geers won the first one in 1897 with The Monk and Fred Edman the last with Favonian. In the years which have elapsed this race has been won by such horses as Nico, Billy Buch, Uhlan, R. T. C., Rhythmell, Early Dreams, Ante Guy, Jeanette Rankin and The Great Volo. The record for the event is 2:03 1-4.

Other Fixtures.

The other fixtures at Lexington include the Castleton, Ashland, Phoenix, Cumberland, Lafayette. The last three are for pacers. The horses eligible to start in same include Baron Worthy, Ribbon Cane, Brooke Volo, La Paloma, Sparkle, Russell Ongale, Colonel Bidwell, Margaret Spangler, War Bride and Prince Loree.

The outstanding feature at the Toledo meeting was the special between Tillie Brooke and Mrs. Yerkes, in which the Justice Brooke mare reduced Hamburg Belle's race record from 2:01 1-4 to 1:59. She also equaled her second heat in 2:01 3-4, which was on the last day of the meeting cut to 2:01 1-4 by Czarworthy.

The returns for the winning drivers to the close of the Toledo meeting show that the following have won over ten races:

T. W. Murphy	41	O. Erskine	15
V. Fleming	25	H. Stokes	15
W. Flemming	22	C. E. Pitman	14

The Umpire

By H. G. Salsinger

SPEAKING OF MANAGERS, as many people are at this time of each baseball season, brings up a question often asked and nearly always resulting in keen arguments: "Who is or was the best manager in the big leagues?"

Public opinion does not count for much in supplying an answer. Judging managerial ability is beyond the public. Those who are qualified to reply to the question are the players. They alone are in position to properly gauge the qualities of a leader.

So, resorting to the opinions of players, the answer was supplied. It is not surprising to discover that John J. McGraw is selected as the best manager in the National league, but it will come as a surprise to those who follow baseball to discover that the choice in the American league is William Carrigan, who managed the Boston Red Sox. And yet the vote for Carrigan is as solid in the American league as the vote in the National is for McGraw, if not more so.

* * * *

EVERETT SCOTT, the best shortstop the American league has produced and a player who holds the baseball record for consecutive games played, calls Carrigan "the greatest manager baseball has known."

Scott backs up his assertion by intelligent reasons:

"Carrigan had an uncanny instinct in the use of pitchers. I don't think any man ever handled pitchers nearly as well as he. Carrigan knew how to work them and they knew that he knew.

"He also had an uncanny instinct in the use of pinch batsmen. In one game, where the score was tied, we got a couple of men on. Larry Gardner was at bat. Carrigan took out Gardner and sent me up as pinch batter. At that time Gardner was batting .300 or better and as I recall it I wasn't hitting .200. This move would appear ridiculous to probably any other manager, as nearly all of them play what they call 'percentage.' But the wisdom of the move was proved in the result. I hit a triple and we won by those two runs.

"I HAVE seen Carrigan take himself out at bat and send in a substitute batter. It might be a pitcher, who was not regarded as a good hitter, or it might be a utility player. But he seldom went wrong in his judgment.

'Carrigan played no favorites. He was as severe with himself as with any of his players. If he figured he could strengthen his team anytime by benching himself he would bench himself. Of course that made our confidence in him and our respect for him all the stronger.

"He had a way of getting the last ounce out of players, making them work their heads off. There was Duffy Lewis, a fine ball player but apt to fall off in his work. Any time he showed signs of falling off Carrigan would bench him, send in a substitute and ignore him. He would keep him out seven or eight days, sometimes longer. Lewis would conclude that Carrigan intended getting rid of him. As soon as Carrigan was sure Lewis felt that way he would send him back and Lewis would go like a prairie fire.

"Carrigan had a way of keeping players on their toes. It might be a certain way with one and a different way with another but they all gave their last ounce. They played ball for Carrigan."

* * * *

CARRIGAN'S uncanny instinct on pitchers is best illustrated in an incident that "Dutch" Leonard relates. Carrigan developed Leonard into one of the leading lefthanders of baseball. The incident happened on August 30, 1916. Says Leonard:

"We were playing a double-header with the St. Louis Browns. Carrigan sent me in to pitch the first game. I was awful. Before Boston could get out a man in the first inning, St. Louis had scored four runs. Carrigan walked out to the box and said, 'Get into a dry shirt and be ready to pitch the second game.'

"Less than two hours later I started against St. Louis a second time that afternoon. And I finished. What is more St. Louis did not get a hit or run off me and it was the first no-hit, no-run game I ever pitched.

"Carrigan was a marvel as a manager. He got everything his players had. A man who wouldn't play his best for Carrigan wouldn't play his best for any man that ever managed a club.

"HE KNEW how to handle men. In a tight game, where the score was close and he wanted to use a pinch batter, he always let you down easy. He used to say, 'Well, it seems these fellows can't make a run for you so let's see if they can make one for somebody else.'

"He had a way of getting players out of slumps. He would tell them the breaks were against the player who was slumping, that he was really a remarkable ball player and that in a few days everything would be fine again. He put new confidence into slumping players and confidence was about all they needed for lack of confidence brings on slumps. And, in my opinion, patting a slumping player on the back and telling him it isn't his fault at all and that it's all a bad break in luck, is just about the biggest feat a manager can perform."

These few testimonials are picked out of a mass all bringing about the same conclusion—

Carrigan was the best manager the American league has produced.

OMAHA WINS WESTERN FLAG

Oklahoma City, September 27.—Omaha won the Western league pennant here today by defeating Oklahoma City 3 to 2, while Denver was losing to St. Joseph. Today's victory for the Buffalos gave them a lead which Denver, the only other pennant contender, could not overcome by the time the season closes, September 30. It was Omaha's first pennant since 1917.

2 GAMES TODAY AT M'PHERSON

There will be two games of baseball this afternoon at Fort McPherson in the closing of Atlanta's Sunday amateur baseball schedule for the season of 1924. The first game will be played at 1:30 o'clock between the Commodore Feds and the Twenty-second infantry team and the second contest will be between the Commodore Feds and Atlanta Paper company nine.

There is no admission charged and the public is invited to witness the double-header.

Harvard Boasts Backfield Material of Worth; Yale Is Working on Offensive

BY WALTER CAMP.
Special Correspondent of The Constitution.

New York, September 27.—Bob Fisher, up at Cambridge, has "made the jump" at last and gone outside the Haughton-drilled line of coaches by securing as his assistant Dave Campbell, the old captain and end. And it is quite a stretch from Campbell, twenty-two years out, to Jimmy Lee, one year out, who will handle the quarters. But for some time there have been rumors that Harvard was "inbreeding" a little too much, and getting in a rut of plays which her opponents, through long familiarity, had mastered with their defense. So the appointment of Campbell was not unexpected.

"Dave" was a star indeed on the wing of the line, and developed a fine team, just as had another end years before, Arthur Cumnock, who after a long string of lean years turned the tables on Yale at Springfield.

The rest of the Harvard mentors are Walter Trumbull and Derrick Parmenter for the line, and Eddy Mahan and George Owen for the backfield. If Fisher could only use his coaches for players what a fine time he would have! Think of Campbell and Trumbull to form a starting point for the line, and Mahan and Owen as a nucleus for the backfield!

Harvard Well Off.

But Harvard is going to be pretty well off in the backfield as it is, for Fisher has McGlone and Spalding for quarters, as well as last year's freshman, Hamlen. For backs he has Check, Hammond, Gehrke and Cordingley of last year's good ones, as well as Miller and Zarakov of the freshman team of last season. The latter, a 165-pound speed boy, is getting plenty of publicity, and if he only lives up to part of it he should make things interesting.

Harvard's line was depleted by graduation, but when one looks over the field it is not so bad after all. Dunker and Kilgore should make a good pair of guards with Daniel as another possibility. Also Bradford and Laimbeer. There are Theopole, Daley and Victor also for tackles, Greenough and Gamache for centers, and Dean Beals and Coady to start with as ends.

The training tables have opened at Yale, and Jones and Fuller have had a chance to see what the material looks like out on the field. Chamberlain, Comerford and Owsley, beside the younger graduates, were on hand to help. Pat Osbourne, who is now head and front of freshman athletics, will probably take some share of Billy Bull's former job for a time. And "Doc" Bull, who is now in a sanitarium in the south, will be mightily missed at New Haven, especially in the work of developing enemy plays to be put on by the scrub team, an art in which Bull was particularly proficient. He not only "scouted" well, but he could put together the plays he saw and then teach a scrub team to execute them in remarkably short time. If the reader does not believe this is a hard job, he should try it some time.

Coaches Speed Work.

The close approach of the first game, October 4, with North Carolina has driven the coaching staff to far more rapid action than usual, for four teams have been worked out for signal drill, with a view to quickly getting an eleven that will have some semblance of an offensive by the time the southerners arrive. This team will center around Captain Lovejoy in the middle of the line. Eckart and Coene will flank him. Butterworth and Joss will fill up the tackle places, with Bingham also available there, but probably this man will be worked out as an end with Hart, Cottle, Pond and Bench will make up the backfield, and Wienicke has been giving the signals and the quarterback job. Luman, the veteran end of last year, who arrived late, will undoubtedly take one of the end positions later, and Scott will go in the backfield.

Lyle Richeson, that star quarter of last season, is on hand, together with Mallory and Blair to help in the coaching job, and Richeson ought to be able to transfer some of his quarterback quality to the candidates for that job. George Connors, the old Exeter trainer, is permanently placed now as a succesor to Johnnie Mack, and it is safe to say that the condition of the men will be well looked after.

Tigers Hard at Game.

Princeton is hard at work with a similar proposition to Yale's, opening up with a game on October 4, against Amherst. Therefore, a team with a formulated attack and reasonably proficient in signals will have to be whipped together before that date. In another week things will have shaped themselves most definitely for this plan, but Captain Stout could put out a team with a fair attacking power, going on one end himself with Tilson on the other and Drews as a substitute. Gates could go in as one tackle and if they really mean to use Beattie for a tackle job he could fill up the other opening, with Hills and either Crago or Howard as guards, and with a nucleus of a backfield in Caldwell, Williams and LeGendre, and Dinsmore giving the signals, he could get along. He could also try out Murray at tackle and could give Caldwell a chance at center, a position he had some tries at last season. Forrest and Bergen are also available for the middle of the line, and Wingate and Caulkins could follow Dinsmore at quarter. It looks as if such a line-up as that, if it gets ten days' solid work, could manage itself creditably in an opening game.

ASHURST WINS RIFLE MATCH

Camp Perry, Ohio, September 27. Captain W. W. Ashurst, United States marine corps, Washington, D. C., won the national individual rifle match here today with a score of 291 out of a possible 300 over the entire course of five stages. Ashurst finished at the 1,000 stage. Lieutenant Merl L. Broderick, U. S. infantry, Fort Benjamin Harrison, Indiana, was a close second with .290.

The United States marine corps team of 16 men won the united service match with a total of 4,497 out of a possible 4,800. The United States army team was second and the United States navy team third with scores of 4,441 and 4,415 respectively.

The United States infantry team with a total of 1,282 out of a possible 1,500, won the national pistol team match against 19 competitors. The United States marine corps was second with 1,280. The small bore international match will be shot tomorrow. The 20-man team will begin the contest at 8 a. m.

There will be no further matches on the rifle ranges, until Wednesday when the national rifle team match will open. This event will be the final one in the national program.

'MUDDY' REUL TAKES BENCH

Boston, September 27.—"Muddy" Ruel, a catcher by trade on the Washington Senators, with comparatively little or nothing to do of a morning, and Judge Edward A. Counihan, Jr., obviously a jurist whose chief labors are over by afternoon, exchanged professional calls Saturday and traded benches.

Ruel, it should be remarked, is also a lawyer. Judge Counihan, it goes without saying in the city of Boston, is a fan. So there, and here, you are.

The judge invited "Muddy" to brush up a bit on his law Saturday morning by visiting the third district juvenile court, East Cambridge. Being a bit rusty on torts, perhaps, "Muddy" accepted, and sat on the bench while his friend the judge disposed of a batch of cases. One involved a meandering motorist who had struck a silent policeman.

With one of those "one-lawyer-to-another" smiles playing over his face, "Muddy" whispered to the judge, "that reminds me, you never strike a silent umpire!" whereupon the judge, with a "one-fan-to-another smile," replied, "not if he has jurisdiction."

Later "Muddy" addressed a bunch of juvenile delinquents, telling them to play clean, hard baseball, never break windows and never swipe the other fellow's ball, and some day, maybe, they would be famous ball players.

PETREL ALUMNI GET CUT RATE

Members of the Oglethorpe Alumni association, the board of founders and the woman's board may purchase season tickets to all Oglethorpe athletic contests staged on the home grounds of the Petrels for $6, according to announcement Saturday by Dr. Thornwell Jacobs, president. The tickets are got good for the annual football and baseball games with Georgia Tech, as these are played on Tech's grounds.

However, holders of the tickets this fall will be admitted to the Petrel games with Sewanee and Mercer at Grant field. They will also be honored at all Oglethorpe basketball and baseball games played here.

EMORY MAPS OUT ATHLETIC PROGRAM

Athletics at Emory this year will be the best in the history of the school, according to the prediction of Professor J. G. Lester, director of athletics at the university. With the new track and field coach, Professor Huntley, on the job, with coaches assigned to every other department, with efficient student managers in charge of the various branches, and with a multitude of men taking part, everything is looking to a highly successful season for all sports.

Football practice will start this week, it was announced, and the first games of the season will be played next Monday. The schedule this fall will be the same as that followed last year, one game to be played every Monday morning.

There will be five teams this year, one of which will combine the law school, the graduate school and the liberal arts seniors. The other four will represent, respectively, the liberal arts freshmen, the sophomores, the juniors, and the theologs.

Mr. Huntley will coach the freshmen, Professor Lester the sophomores, Professor McLeod the juniors, Professor Peebles the theologs, and Collins and Krondstadt the lawyers.

Professor Huntley, who takes Marvin Harper's place as track and field coach, brings with him a store of experience in this work, having spent several years coaching in various schools in Mississippi.

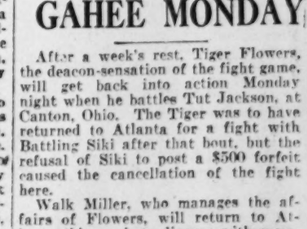

FLOWERS FIGHTS GAHEE MONDAY

After a week's rest, Tiger Flowers, the deacon-sensation of the fight game, will get back into action Monday night when he battles Tut Jackson, at Canton, Ohio. The Tiger was to have returned to Atlanta for a fight with Battling Siki after that bout, but the refusal of Siki to post a $500 forfeit caused the cancellation of the fight here.

Walk Miller, who manages the affairs of Flowers, will return to Atlanta this week to discuss with members of the Disabled American Veterans of the World War the possibility of presenting Flowers here this week. The Tiger has not fought here since he won a newspaper decision over Harry Greb in their recent no-decision fight at Fremont, Ohio.

Flowers' fight program for the week includes a mix with Battling Gahee Tuesday night at Zanesville, Ohio. The big fight of the month for the Tiger is a scrap with Lou Bogash at New York on October 11. Beyond that date his activities have not been mapped out.

GIANTS WIN 10TH FLAG; SENATORS CINCH PENNANT

Ladkin Wins Second International Turf Event

Epinard Again Finishes Second

Aqueduct Race Track, New York, September 27.—(By the Associated Press.)—In one of the most thrilling races of American turf history Ladkin, Major August Belmont's brilliant 3-year-old, by Fair Play-Lading, ridden by Clarence Kummer, today won the second international special at a mile before a crowd of 40,000. The time was 1:36 2-5 and the value to the winner $28,750.

Epinard, continental champion, again finished second, this time by a nose and coming fast, a length ahead of Wise Counsellor, Kentucky colt which conquered the French crack by a narrow margin on Labor day in the first special at six furlongs.

Lost in the glamour of the contest among the three leaders was a struggle between Zev and My Own, highlights of last year, but dim today. Two lengths behind Wise Counsellor, Zev finished fourth, only a nose beyond his rival. Little Chief, the only other starter, trailed the field three lengths.

Just in Time.

The Belmont colt flashed to the wire with just enough to win from the flying Frenchman, which had gained two lengths in the final 50 yards and, it seemed, would have won in another stride. Epinard's challenge came as Ladkin was shaking off Wise Counsellor after a two-horse race from the quarter post, where Epinard was ridden into the rail and out of the race, temporarily, by Wise Counsellor.

The incident at the quarter was the one disturbing factor of a perfect spectacle.

Epinard had broken away from his field and was off like a certain winner in the first 16th. At the far turn Wise Counsellor and Ladkin came up, and in passing crowded Epinard to the fence. From there they went on, with Epinard struggling three lengths behind to regain his stride.

The contest went on without its star, which floundered among the secondary group. Neck and neck, the scarlet blouse of Kummer and the white and red of O'Donnell bobbed on their straining mounts, two lengths ahead of the field, which already began to string out in the finishing order. At the half and into the third quarter the two 3-year-olds raced, neither giving ground.

Ladkin stuck his head in front at the last furlong post but the alert O'Donnell on Wise Counsellor picked up the distance and brought his own horse into the lead. In the terrific struggle which followed, both boys rode high, colored blouses flaming like Gypsy riders. Wise Counsellor cracked at the final 16th and Ladkin gasped to continue, almost ridden into the ground. Then from the outside came another chestnut colt, running like a moving statue, in perfect rhythm.

"Epinard wins Epinard wins!" The cheering stands shouted as a steady flow of speed, increased at every bound, brought him even with the faltering Wise Counsellor and onto the tail, then the flank of the tiring Ladkin. To the shoulders of his opponent Epinard crept and with another leap would have passed, but Haynes had delayed his spurt a fraction too long and the French colt, acknowledged great, was beaten for the second time in America under conditions regarded as far from establishing his true worth.

When the horses were brought back to the judges' stand, it was Epinard that received the greater tribute of the crowd, although the splendid Ladkin was heartily cheered. Pierre Wertheimer, owner of the French champion, went to Major Belmont's box to congratulate the veteran horseman.

Protests.

In the stands and around the enclosure buzzed protests regarding the incident at the quarter. Everett Haynes, the American jockey, who rode Epinard today and upon his triumphant days, denied interference by O'Donnell and declared that he had intentionally pulled up his mount when he found that he was setting too fast a pace. Horsemen ridiculed his statement and also criticised the jockey for failure to start his final challenge until too late, declaring that the French colt was undoubtedly the best in the race, but that Haynes had been victimized by sharper American jockeys.

"I did not think any American jockey would cut off my horse that way," Wertheimer commented.

The time was only two-fifths of a second slower than the track record set in 1921 by John P. Grier and only a second slower than Cherry Pie's American record. Fractional times at the eighths were: 12 1-5; 23 1-5; 35; 46 2-5; 58 1-5; 1:10 3-5; 1:23 2-5, and 1:36 2-5. The value to the winner was $28,750. Epinard received $5,000 and Wise Counsellor $2,000.

The winner, a favorite all day, paid 2 to 1 to his backers. Epinard was quoted at 11 to 5 and Wise Counsellor at 16 to 5. Zev was a 5-to-1 shot.

German Government Hears All Sides in Trade Council

(Karl von Siemens, head of the Siemens-Schuckert Works, Berlin, in September Current History Magazine.)

If the United States had an economic council similar to the new economic council which the advent of the republic brought to Germany, congress, instead of being distracted by powerful lobbies, could obtain from it whatever authentic information on the economic needs of the country it required, since such a council would represent every important economic group. The very variety of the interests represented, the fact that they were chosen without regard to party affiliations, but solely as spokesmen of the various economic groups, and the character of the men and women selected, would result in their final decisions being determined by the common good. The captain of industry or the labor leader who could be tempted to sponsor or support selfish measures through obscure agents working in the dark would not sully his reputation by yielding to sordid self-interest or corruption. Thrust responsibility upon men, give them opportunity to argue their case in public and to compare notes with their fellows and they will be found worthy of the trust reposed in them. To think otherwise is to despair of democracy.

Fights at Fort October 8

LARRY AVERA,

junior welterweight champ of the south, who will fight K. O. Moore, army champion, at Fort McPherson, October 8.

Larry Avera Meets Moore, Army Champ, at Fort Oct. 8

What promises to be one of the hardest fought, fastest battles staged here in several months was announced last night by the athletic officer of Fort McPherson in the matching of Larry Avera, acknowledged junior welterweight champion of the south, and K. O. Moore, a young husky of the army, who claims the championship of the Panama Canal Zone in his division.

The fight will come off October 8 at Fort McPherson and plans are being laid to take care of a crowd of Atlanta, East Point and College Park people who have not had an opportunity of seeing Avera work since early in the summer when he slammed his way to a technical knockout over the Walloping Wop, another McPherson battler.

Avera won his last fight, in which he went on in Jacksonville last week against Young Joe Rivers, New Orleans, by a knockout in the second round. Before this fight, he had run up a long string of consecutive decisions, that included such boys as Charlie Pitts.

Moore came to Atlanta from the Canal zone a few weeks ago flinging challenges everywhere he went for a welterweight bout. His offers to do battle went untaken for several days. In fact, they went just as long as Avera was busy with the Rivers gentleman in Jacksonville. When Avera returned to Atlanta, the challenge was taken and the fight arranged.

Moore is ambitious in his claims, for he says he's not only the best the army had in the Canal zone, but can make any boy of his weight in the fourth corps area taste resin dust. He may have some basis for his claims, having won his last four arguments by giving his opponents a trip to slumberland.

A semi-windup has been arranged between Young Bernier, another army pugilist, and Larry O'Leary, a clever little boxer of Atlanta. Both are featherweights.

Victoria, British Columbia.—British Columbia's salmon pack last year totalled 1,341,677 cases, as against 1,290,326 cases in 1922, according to the annual report of the commissioner of fisheries. The gain in the 1923 pack, according to the report, is due to a substantial increase in pink and chum salmon, 70 per cent of the total output consisting of these two species.

---The--- Rules of Golf

BY INNIS BROWN.

Occasionally a player is confronted with a puzzling situation where the ball moves as he is in the act of making a swing. The question immediately arises as to whether he is to be charged with a stroke or not.

Of course if he goes through with the stroke and hits the ball, the movement counts a stroke. But if he stops the club before it reaches the ball, or even if he diverts the course of the clubhead in such a way as to indicate clearly that he is trying to avoid hitting the ball, then he is not charged with a stroke. Supposing that the clubhead does not make contact with the ball, the only remaining contingency on which a stroke can be counted is that of swinging with intent to hit the ball. And if the player shows clearly that he has changed his intent to hit the ball, then the movement cannot be considered as a stroke.

If any golf rules puzzle you write Innis Brown, care of The Constitution Sports Editor, enclosing stamped, self-addressed envelope. He'll clear them for you.

FOR A BETTER SCORE.

Advice to keep the eye on the ball is well-founded, but unless the additional admonition to keep the head stationary is obeyed, keeping the eye on the ball will not help much. It is no uncommon sight to see a player raise his head and shoulders as he is making the swing, especially if he is swaying his body instead of pivoting properly. Usually the result is a topped shot, and sometimes the ball is missed entirely. The head must be kept in place. It is the anchor of the stroke, and if it is raised, the stroke is practically sure to become a failure.

STRIB IS GIVEN VERDICT OVER M'LAUGHLIN

Raleigh, N. C., September 27.—Young Stribling, of Atlanta, outpointed Vic McLaughlin, of New York, by a small margin in a 10-round bout here tonight, according to the decision of a majority of the newspaper men. The bout was marred by a series of clinches, for which both fighters were declared to be equally guilty.

Stribling did most of the leading, but his blows did not seem to hurt the New Yorker. In the third round Stribling landed several vicious lefts to McLaughlin's face, causing his nose to bleed.

The fighters apparently suffered more from the heat than they did from each others blows.

The crowd soundly hissed the boxers for their continued clinching. Stribling tried vainly to knock his opponent out in the ninth and tenth rounds, landing a series of rights and lefts to McLaughlin's head and stomach, but McLaughlin was able to take all the punishment the Georgian had in store for him.

In the ninth round Stribling backed McLaughlin to the ropes and the New Yorker narrowly missed being knocked out of the ring when Stribling set in a series of lefts to the head and stomach. McLaughlin regained his balance, however, and was fighting Stribling toe to toe when the round ended.

McLaughlin's blows were without effect and he landed but a few solid ones during the entire 10 rounds, the Georgian blocking nicely. Stribling punished McLaughlin in the clinches by pecking at his kidneys with rights and lefts.

More than 4,000 persons saw the fight, it being held in the city auditorium. "Ma" and "Pa" Stribling were at the ringside.

National League

GIANTS CLINCH RAG.

New York, September 27.—The New York Giants today broke a precedent of 49 years and won the National league championship for the fourth time in succession by defeating Philadelphia here today, 5 to 1, while Brooklyn was losing to Boston.

No other National or American club ever has won four successive pennants. Manager McGraw, of New York, was thwarted in his ambition for four straight pennant winners when the Boston club beat out his Giants in a September finish 10 years ago.

The championship is McGraw's tenth, twice as many as were won by any other National league managers.

Bentley found the Philadelphians easy picking and held the visitors to four hits. A muff by Jackson gave Philadelphia its only run in the first inning.

The Giants bunched hits on Ring and scored their runs one at a time. Ring was driven out of the box in the sixth inning. Holke was spiked by Terry and was obliged to retire.

Put Dodgers Out.

Brooklyn, September 27.—The Braves put the Brooklyn Dodgers permanently out of the race for the National League pennant today by winning a close game 3 to 2. Incidentally the Boston club broke Bill Doak's string of consecutive victories, which had reached 10 up to this point.

Cooney held the Dodgers to four hits, one of which was a home run by Brown, first man up in the fifth. This was Brooklyn's first hit of the game. The Brooklyn team scored its second and final run in the eighth on a single by High, Mitchell's walk and Wheat's single.

WALTER JOHNSON

Here is a striking picture of the great Washington (American league) pitcher who was assured participation in the 1924 world series Saturday by the Senators' win and the Yankees' defeat.

DODSON WINS GAME FOR RICHMOND

Richmond, Va., September 27.—Frank Dodson, star-board star of the Richmond, Virginia league, champions, who will report to Manager John J. McGraw at the Giants' training camp next season, twirled a chain of ciphers around the Waterbury, Eastern league, pennant winners, in an 11-inning game here today, and the Colts won, 1 to 0. The big Arkansan allowed only five scattered hits, struck out five batters and walked one, while three of the New Englanders' hurlers were trying to keep the healthy wallops of the locals from going safe. Only seven hits were registered off Fuller, Ulrich and Heitman, but the visiting outfield was kept busy with eight putouts. Dodson's single, Graham's error and Klein's double accounted for the only tally of the game.

Washington Must Lose Both of Remaining Games To Be Tied by New York

New York, September 27.—While the New York Giants clinched their fourth straight pennant today and their tenth under the magnetic leadership of John McGraw within a score of years, Washington advanced a step nearer the Senator's first flag triumph by defeating Boston while the New York Yankees lost to Philadelphia.

Washington, with a two game lead, now can get no worse than a tie in the junior circuit, for the rival contenders each have two remaining games, scheduled Monday and Tuesday. A victory for the Senators in only one will assure them the pennant, even if the Yankees take both of their remaining contests.

By taking his fourth straight pennant, McGraw gained one of his most cherished goals and set a major league record. Back in the '70's, in the old National association, Boston won four straight pennants, while in the American association a decade later St. Louis won four straight, but no American nor National league club ever has won more than three in a row.

The Giants' finish this season, despite the handicap of injuries that forced Groh and Frisch, bulwarks of the club's inner defense, out of the lineup, ranks among the most sensational in National league history. Threatened by both Pittsburg and Brooklyn, the makeshift McGraw team rallied in the final week, put the Pirates out of the race, by defeating them three times in a row and clinched the pennant today by trimming Philadelphia while Brooklyn lost to Boston.

Except for a brief interval when Brooklyn, the dark horse of the race, gained the top, the Giants have set the pace all season. Their triumph, however, was gained by the closest margin of any machine McGraw has led to the front. They held a margin of two and a half games tonight, with two games yet to play with Philadelphia, while Brooklyn has but one more with Boston.

Two-Game Lead for Senators.

Boston, September 27.—Washington brought its lead over the Yankees to two full games this afternoon by beating the Red Sox, 7 to 5, while the Yankees were losing in Philadelphia. The turning point of this game was Pinch-Hitter Lefler's double, his second in two days in that capacity, with the bases full in the fifth, scoring three runs.

YANKS ALMOST GOT 13.

Philadelphia, September 27.—A wild pitch by Joe Bush in the seventh inning of today's fray with the Athletics cost the New York Yankees the game, 4 to 3, and made their chances of overcoming the Senators' lead practically nil.

Had it not been for this wild pitch the Yankees' scoring of two runs in the ninth would have tied the score.

The bad pitch came with Jimmy Dykes on second and before the husky "Wally" Schang could retrieve the ball Dykes had scored with the fourth and what proved to be the winning tally.

Rommel pitched a strong game from start to finish, although he weakened in the ninth, when he was solved for three hits.

Red Smith Closes Season as Leading Hitter

Ruth Heading American League

Final batting averages of the Southern association for the 1924 season, complete but unofficial, and including all players in as many as ten games, reflect the glory of age over youth, for they show the ancient and honorable J. Carlisle (Red) Smith leading the procession as a hitsmith, while the younger stars of Dixie of all shades and degrees trail. Smith has not even a "nominal" rival except Reiger, who in ten games with Little Rock and 25 times at bat, hit for .405. Smith's own batting average was .384 in 134 games.

Batting was not all this veteran, returning after years to the territory in which he got his baseball start, did. He stole 25 bases and is credited with 16 sacrifice hits. Of his straightway hits nine were home runs. His nearest rival among regular players for batting honors is his team mate, Dick Burrus, who batted .372. Roy Carlisle, of Memphis, who led the league for much of the season, hit for .367 at the finish and was the Southern's most notable slugger. He made a total of 233 hits and they netted all told 355 bases. Included were 45 two-baggers, 19 three-baggers and 13 home runs.

John Anderson, of Chattanooga, led in home runs with 26, Krehmeyer, of Atlanta, led in sacrifice hits with 37 and Stuffy Stewart, of Birmingham, was the leading base stealer with his 62 thefts.

In team batting Atlanta led to the end, the notable bunch of sluggers that Bert Niehoff had assembled batting for .300 even as a team. The champion Memphis team ran third in hitting and New Orleans was first in fielding, with Memphis second in this department.

The season closed with Merz, of Memphis, carrying off the pitching honors in percentage of games won, among regulars. He has 20 victories to his credit as against but six defeats, giving him a percentage of .769. His team mate, McGrew, runs second to him in percentage of victories. Warmouth, of Memphis, led in strikeouts and Good, of Birmingham, was the wild man of the league.

American League.

With the season practically closed, honors for batting and pitching in the American league are pretty well established. In batting Babe Ruth will lead his league, but with a reduced percentage. The figures that include games played Wednesday last, there being no games played Thursday, give Ruth a mark of .379, five points over Stephenson, of Cleveland, whose claim would be disputed anyway were he to top the Bambino, since he has played in less than half the games of the schedule. Jamieson, of the Indians, has shoved himself ahead of Falk, of the White Sox, by six points for the honor of being runner-up, to Ruth.

Team batting averages show Cleveland with a lead of three points over all competitors. The feature in this particular has been the advance of the Washington team, which as it has made its desperate stand for championship honors has laid the wood against the ball until it has a team average of .294, which ties it with the Browns of St. Louis for second place in team batting. New York, the pennant contender, rests in fourth place as a hitting team, showing how times have changed in the American league. And the Yankees are first in team fielding, an honor which they probably do not care so much about.

Eddie Collins did not increase his base stealing mark and by the latest set of averages rested at 42, enough, however, to put him in a class by himself in the theft department. Ruth's home run record remained stationary at 46. He is shy two of 200 hits and will have to hustle to make that mark.

Through his persistent efforts to keep Washington on top to the end Walter Johnson raised his total of games won to 23. Of course, he stands in a class by himself as a strike-out pitcher. Holloway, of Detroit, was running second to Johnson in percentage of victories.

National League.

Batting averages of the National league that include games played Thursday show that Rogers Hornsby had dropped a point below .420, which was the mark he was shooting at to equal the high record set by modern major batters—Cobb and Sisler. Hornsby has dropped pretty steadily since he came back to work after being out with a strained back, but he will finish the season with well over .400 as his batting percentage. He has a chance for beating out Jack Fournier as the home run king of the National, as he is but two behind the Brooklyn first sacker and his former comrade on the Cardinals. Fournier has 27 homers and Hornsby 25. Williams, of Philadelphia has 23. Hornsby leads by a wide margin in total bases hit for.

The Giants, in spite of the tight pitching they faced in the Pittsburg series, which put the Pirates out of it, maintained their .300 batting percentage as a team and with nothing but games against the Phillies to face should maintain that or even better it. The Giants now have the impressive total of 846 runs scored, which gives their prospective opponents in a world's series something to think about. In fielding the Giants show their class by ranking second to Boston. That may not be a special honor, since the lowly Braves set the pace, but it is something to record. Oddly enough the Phillies, near as lowly as the Braves, rank third in fielding, next to the Giants.

Dazzy Vance ran into a losing streak during the past week or so and having dropped two games now has a total of six defeats charged to him, but there will be no pitcher near him in the number of games won, Yde remains the leader in percentage of games won, but might even lose that honor to Vance if things break against him in the games remaining to be played from the time these figures were compiled. Yde's third defeat of the season came at the hands of the Giants on September 24, was the first time the Giants had beaten him this season and practically put his team out of the pennant race.

THE CONSTITUTION'S REAL ESTATE REVIEW

:: :: CONDUCTED IN THE INTEREST OF THE DEVELOPMENT OF ATLANTA AND THE SOUTH :: ::

Seen From the Auction Block

BY THE AUCTIONEER

STEWART SPENDING VACATION IN FLORIDA.

Allen Stewart, general manager of the Turner-Brown company, spent last week in Florida, enjoying his summer vacation. Mr. Stewart is one of the best-known realty men in the city, and his many friends wish him a pleasant and health-giving trip.

"I AIN'T GOIN' TO WEAR IT NO MORE."—THOMPSON.

So said Fain C. ("Chuck") Thompson, popular salesman of F. P. & George J. Morris company, as he lifted the "lid" which for some time has adorned his brow, and which has come to be looked upon by his friends as a familiar "land-mark." Mr. Thompson, in the same spirit, it is believed, that is entertained by one with reference to a comfortable arm chair, a favorite pipe, or other personal belongings, became so attached to his venerable headgear that he just naturally hated to fling it aside. Consequently, for some seasons he is said to have clung to the familiar hat until the jibes of his friends and the advice of his business associates forced his latent pride to the surface and induced him to discard the ancient nondescript in favor of a brand-new pearl gray fedora, which is said to become his special style of beauty.

"And it wasn't won on the mayor's race, either," said Mr. Thompson, as he proudly offered the new hat for inspection.

GOOD RACE ON IN THOMPSON OFFICE.

The contests that have been on in the American and National leagues and on the golf course at Merion, where Bobby Jones kept Atlanta before the world, are "slow-drags" indeed beside the race that is on between the salesmen on the staff of the John J. Thompson company.

This contest at the present writing is any man's race, with Mercer Harbin slightly in the lead, F. R. Wing "flying" next and Robert C. Thompson a close third. These three are bunched with some other contestants whose strides are getting longer and more vigorous with each step, and who have good chances yet of coming under the wire in the money.

OUT-OF-TOWN RESULTS FOR "A B C" ADS.

Classified ads in The Constitution get results, not only in Atlanta and surrounding territory, said Charles M. Paschall, well-known realtor, "but they have a pulling power that extends over the borders into other states."

Mr. Paschall exhibited a letter of inquiry regarding Atlanta property that had been sent to him by a party in Tennessee. "We have inquiries from many cities and towns outside of Georgia," said Mr. Paschall, "many of which come as direct results of The Constitution classified system. It has served us well, and we look for even greater results from using this high-class modern form of publicity."

CUNNINGHAM WITH OLIVER SMITH CO.

W. G. Cunningham, popular real estate salesman, is now connected with the Oliver Smith company, 401 Grant building. Mr. Cunningham has a wide experience in the selling of real estate and the company predicts a splendid future for him.

JESSE DRAPER RETURNS FROM ABROAD.

Returning from a tour of several weeks' duration, on which he covered several continental countries, Jesse Draper, the popular head of the well-known realty firm of Draper-Owens company, has resumed his place in the local business world.

Mr. Draper reported a splendid trip and expressed his delight in being back in Atlanta, where many friends have welcomed him home.

MARSHBURNS RETURN FROM VACATION.

Mr. and Mrs. N. E. Marshburn, Sr., have returned to the city from a vacation trip of two weeks. They made an extensive tour of Florida.

LOWRY PORTER JOINS RALPH B. MARTIN CO.

Announcement was made Saturday that Lowry Porter, well known in the local real estate world, has joined the staff of the Ralph B. Martin company. He will be found by his friends and business associates in his new office in the Atlanta Trust Company building.

Mr. Porter has had much experience in the buying and selling of Atlanta real estate. Both Mr. Porter and Mr. Martin have received congratulations upon the new business arrangement between them.

BETTER BUILDING LAWS WILL PREVENT FIRES.

Atlanta realtors are interested in the work constantly carried on to lessen the enormous losses by fire in the United States. Many are of the opinion that something should be done at the source to lessen this fire loss. That is, buildings should be constructed of a more durable and fire-resisting material. The time has arrived when Atlanta should have stringent building laws for the erection of inflammable structures should be prohibited. There is not another city in the United States the size of Atlanta that has such lax building laws and the wonder is that there are not more fire losses and more tragedies resulting from such fires, according to a well-known Atlanta realty agent.

"Anyone riding around over the city will surely notice the shoddy and unsubstantial apartment houses being constructed. The frame is of wood with 2x4 studding, constituting the support for the side walls. This studding is covered with a thin sheeting against which rests one coat of brick work."

It is said to be well known among underwriters that an exterior coat of brick has no fire-resisting quality and the structure is commonly known as "brick veneer," classed as frame structures from the standpoint of fire risk.

Many realtors claim that the practice of housing a great many families in such apartment houses should be discontinued, and that from now on all structures which are designed to contain more than one family should be fireproof. This matter will be discussed more thoroughly at future meetings of the Atlanta Real Estate board, it was stated.

"An illustration of how widely the real estate page of The Constitution is being read by the Atlanta people was given by L. J. Hill, Jr., well-known architect and engineer, of 312 Atlanta National Bank building, who has just returned from an automobile tour of Florida with Mrs. Hill.

"When I left Atlanta," said Mr. Hill, "I did so without saying anything of my plans to anyone, but to my surprise, when I got back to the city dozens of my friends in different avenues of life greeted me with the hope that my tour of Florida had been a pleasant one. Puzzled as to how the information got so broadly disseminated, I asked a friend how he learned of my trip and he replied: 'I saw in on the real estate page of The Constitution.' There is no question in my mind now," concluded the engineer, "that The Constitution is generally and carefully read by the people, for it was the only means of informing such a large number of my friends about my itinerary."

Mr. Hill toured Florida and visited practically all the prominent resorts, reporting a most enjoyable trip.

MRS. IVEY TO VISIT FLORIDA DURING WINTER.

Mrs. Gussie B. Ivey, one of the best known business women in the city, who has for several years been looked upon as an interesting figure in real estate circles, announces that she will leave within a short time for an extended visit to Florida, where she will combine pleasure with business to the extent of making a few realty transactions in Sarasota, one of Florida's most beautiful and progressive cities.

Mrs. Ivey has made a specialty of finding homes for her clients, using an experience and a knowledge gained through years of travel and study to aid her in locating her patrons in suitable and satisfactory domiciles. She is said to have been successful to an extraordinary degree, building up a wide circle of friends and patrons, who doubtless wish for her a successful business career in her temporary home, also a swift return to Atlanta, where she says her heart will always be.

"I could not even consider leaving Atlanta for good and all," said Mrs. Ivey, "and you can keep your weather eye open looking for me back again. I love Atlanta and realize the value of a business here, where real estate has values that are sound. I do not mean to close my Atlanta office permanently by any means," said Mrs. Ivey.

FRED P. JETER MAKES TRIP TO BIRMINGHAM.

Making a flying business trip to the Alabama metropolis, Fred P. Jeter returned from Birmingham the early part of the past week after spending a while in the office conducted by the Grant-Jeter company in that city.

CONGRATULATIONS GIVEN TO ALDERMAN CARL DOLVIN.

Many friends of Carl Dolvin in local realty circles have extended congratulations to the newly-elected Alderman Carl Dolvin, who was nominated Wednesday to represent the tenth ward for the coming term in general council. Mr. Dolvin is one of the best known figures in Atlanta real estate and political circles. He has served the city on a previous occasion in general council and has had the experience that is expected to render him particularly valuable to the city government as well as his constituency. Here's congratulations to both Mr. Dolvin upon his success and to his ward upon its new representative on the aldermanic board.

1924 Was Biggest Year for Minter Homes Company

The Minter Homes company, just completing the third quarter of 1924, has had one of the most successful periods of business since the company began operations in Atlanta, four years ago, according to Keller F. Melton, sales manager of this company, having built over $300,000 worth of homes during that time.

The Minter Homes company has opened a new plant on Krog street, where they manufacture all of the mill work, trim, etc., that goes into the construction of their houses. In addition to this they are carrying in the yards located there, an adequate stock of all building materials necessary in the construction of homes of all classes.

The financing plan of the company, whereby they build the home according to the plans of the owner, without any cash advance on his part, it was stated, is being accepted very warmly by the prospective home owners of Atlanta, as witnessed by the fact that more than 95 per cent of the houses being contracted for are being built and financed by this new plan, rather than by the old way.

It is said to be a highly attractive proposition for the lot owner who wants a home, and has not the necessary cash with which to build it, to be able to own a home of his own selection, built on his lot and more into it, paying for it on terms that will not amount to more than renting the house from someone else.

Assisting Mr. Melton in the sales department are M. B. Owen, S. W. Bacon, Jr., and Robert Powell, all residents of Atlanta.

On John J. Thompson's Staff

H. GLENN M'NAIR.

J. E. SAUNDERS.

Announcement has been made of the addition of two well-known business men to the sales staff of the John J. Thompson company.

H. Glenn McNair has for the last three years been connected with the Fuller Brush company, in Jacksonville, Fla.

J. E. Saunders is well known in Atlanta realty world, having been in the building business for several months. He was formerly with the John J. Thompson company.

New Apartment Service Started by Grant-Jeter Co.

In addition to the famous hotel service, which was inaugurated by the Grant-Jeter company in its large Atlanta apartments, this enterprising real estate and renting house has put on an apartment promotion service that is expected to add greatly to the popularity of the concern.

MRS. MATILDA DICK CORBETT,

Head of the apartment promotion service of the Grant-Jeter Co.

This service, which has been worked out and inaugurated by Mrs. Matilda Dick Corbitt, embraces many features new to the apartment house service, and is said to promise far-reaching results to the company.

Under the plan worked out by Mrs. Corbitt and Mr. Jeter, the duties of the former embrace the renting of apartments to newcomers to the city; combined business and social visits to the patrons of the company's apartments for the purpose of seeking facts and securing information that may be employed in making each patron happier and more satisfied in their residences; and looking for things that might form the basis for suggestions with reference to changes or improvements in the company's service and relations with the occupants of the various apartments.

"My first duties with the Grant-Jeter company," said Mrs. Corbitt, who is well known to many Atlantans as a prmoinent figure in the advertising world for several years, and who is also known widely in a social way, "were to stimulate its renting business wherever possible by securing new patrons for its many apartments. I found many ways of securing the names of people who contemplated removal to this city and by the use of various means not ordinarily employed, I secured a number of new patrons for the company. Realizing some success in the above line, I began to cast about me for other ways by which I might make my services useful and productive to my employers, and with this in view I felt that we could add to my apartment promotion work other features that would be effective in keeping patrons just as the promotion service had been in procuring them.

Business and Pleasure.

"It was with this idea in mind that I determined that it would be to the benefit of the firm for me to combine my business calls with social visits, and while at the various apartments seeking to place new tenants, that I might kill another bird with the same stone by finding out just how well pleased those tenants were who were already in the buildings. Going into this feature of the business, always with the advice and counsel of Mr. Jeter, whose ideas are always progressive and good, I found that there were many ways in which I could help to improve the service the company was giving, thereby bringing the patron into closer relationship with the company, and making better satisfied tenants. There are many duties to perform, the scope of my service widening and deepening as I gain a broader acquaintance among our patrons and a closer insight into conditions surrounding their homes."

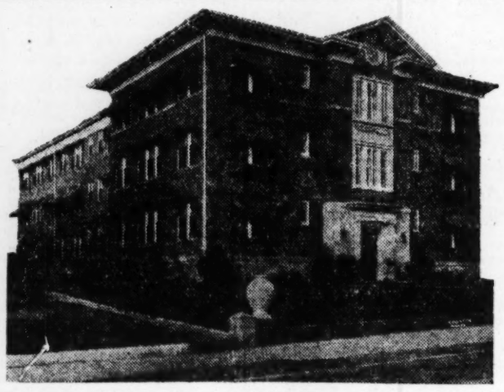

Mrs. Corbitt has made a special study of the social as well as the business side of apartment renting, and declares it to be her purpose to develop a service that will ramify into every detail and feature of the great apartment renting service of the company she is serving, searching out the big and little things that can be adjusted or improved rendering homes happier and tenants better satisfied with their residences.

"For instance," said Mrs. Corbitt, "in a visit to an apartment it is possible that something will come to my observation that will show me that a certain family in that building is 'out of joint,' so to speak, or that they do not just fit into the scheme of things or jibe with other occupants of the building. In other words, this family might be out of its social latitude, or there might be some other thing that prevents them from being happy. It will be my duty to look for just such situations, and upon finding a misplaced family of course I will endeavor to place them in the apartment with their kind of folks. The remedying of other obstacles to people's happiness and satisfaction in our apartments will also be part of my special work and it will give me great pleasure to locate and if possible rectify anything that will make patrons happier in our dwellings."

"I recognize the fact that there is a big work in the world for the women to perform, and I believe they can perform it without forsaking their sex to assume mannish qualities. The task I have cut out for myself as the apartment house promotion agent for the Grant-Jeter company demands first of all womanliness and a clear insight into the domestic side of human relationships."

Much success is predicted for Mrs. Corbitt and Mr. Jeter in the new enterprise, and their co-work will be watched with much interest, it is believed, by those who are interested in the greater development of the apartment house renting business.

Handsome New Apartment

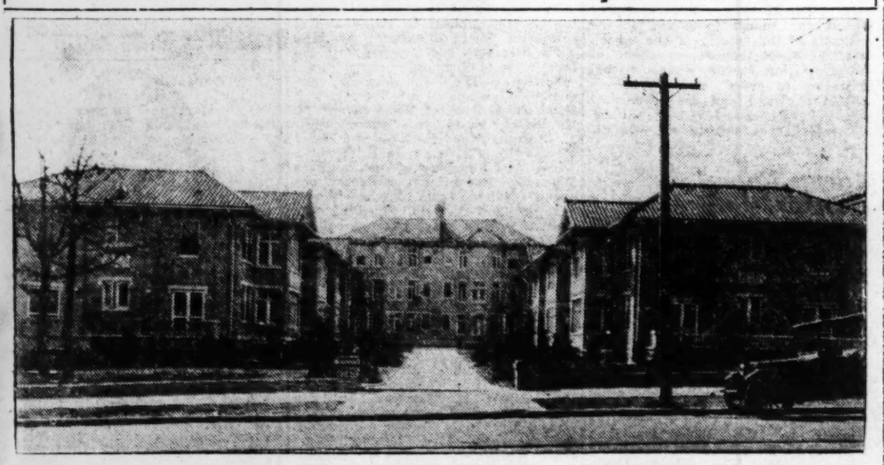

The Turman-Brown company, leading apartment-renting agency, is calling the attention of home-seekers to the beautiful Lakeview apartments at 968 Piedmont avenue. This splendid building is finished and appointed in keeping with modern apartment-house practice, and is said to be one of the most pleasant of the multiple-unit dwellings so popular in Atlanta.

The handsome Lakeview apartments at 968 Piedmont avenue, is one of the popular multiple dwellings of that elegant residential section. This apartment, with its beautiful lawn and flowers, presents a most pleasing view, and with its splendid modern interior finish, it is regarded as one of the most attractive apartments on the north side.

With units of 3, 4, 5, 6 rooms each, this apartment has residences to meet almost every demand of varying-sized families. The appointments are superb in equipment, with bath and toilet installations of the most approved kind. In fact, every feature of the building is of the highest order, and, according to its agents, the Turman-Brown company, this apartment has proven exceedingly popular with patrons.

The Turman-Brown company is exclusive agent for the above apartment, and the books for the dwellings are open in the office of the company in the Flatiron building.

Beautiful Poncemore Apartments

One of the outstanding multiple-unit dwellings on the long list of the Grant-Jeter company is the handsome Poncemore, which, as its name indicates, stands at the corner of Ponce de Leon and Moreland avenues. It is one of the most conveniently arranged and modernly appointed buildings of its kind in the city, and it is said to be occupied by a very high type of tenants. The units of the Poncemore are of 1 to 6 rooms, and each of these dwellings are provided with all necessary conveniences. The interior finish is said to be handsome and harmonious, and the bath and toilet fixtures are all that could be desired, according to those familiar with the building. A few units are yet available, it has been stated, for people who are able to furnish references of an acceptable nature.

Otis Addressed Real Estate Body At Fulton Hotel

The meeting of the Atlanta real estate board, which was held last Thursday at the Robert Fulton hotel, was one of the most interesting and important sessions of the new season, according to members present. A splendid luncheon was served to the members, after which Robert R. Otis, well-known Atlanta realtor, delivered a fine talk upon the rates, rules and customs of the real estate fraternity. Mr. Otis' address was of particular interest and importance, it was stated, in view of his experience in the local realty world. He has taken part in many of the big developments of the city and has appeared in many movements looking to the civic advancement of Atlanta.

Another feature of the luncheon-meeting was a report from a special delegation appointed to attend the recent meeting of the Fulton county commissioners for the purpose of inducing the county officials to allow the tax rate to remain as in 1923 and previous years. The appeal, however, did not prove successful, the commissioners deciding that an advance in the rates was essential to the financial needs of the county.

Another matter of great importance to the public that was discussed at the real estate meeting was that of appraisals of real property. In order that the owners of realty might have the benefit of valuations arrived at only after systematic and scientific investigation, the real estate board has appointed members specially fitted to make various kinds of property appraisals. This service may be had by corporations, states, municipalities, societies or individuals at a nominal cost, and the economy of the official real estate board valuation is said to be in the fact that every valuation is arrived at only after the most painstaking and exhaustive investigation.

Oust Off-Hand Appraisals.

The real estate board, it was stated, is making special efforts to do away with off-hand appraisals of property, which in many cases only serve to confuse property owners and prospective purchasers. Others interested in real estate are subjected to this potential damage at the hands of unofficial appraisers, who often fall far short of the true valuation of property because of a lack of facilities for arriving at the actual value of a parcel involved, it was stated.

The real estate board, it has been stated, has a program for the winter months that will deal with many important matters relating to real property and owners of real estate in the city. At each of its semi-monthly luncheon meetings one or more of these vitally interesting subjects are dealt with by well-known speakers, and the organization also takes a live part in civic affairs. It is known as one of the most vigorous civic organizations in Atlanta and under the direction of President Albert S. Adams and Secretary Charles S. Northen, it is expected that the board will take a spirited part in the upbuilding of the city during the coming months.

Grant-Jeter Co. Takes Over North Side Residence Tract

Virginia Highlands, one of the most desirable residential developments of Atlanta's beautiful northeast side, has been taken over by the Grant-Jeter company's sales department, and Manager Clayton Burke, of that department, is mapping out a sales campaign through which it is expected that every home site in the subdivision will be sold to select class of home builders.

This beautiful subdivision, with its principal entrance at the junction of Highland and Virginia avenues, is threaded with well-paved and beautifully laid out driveways. The sidewalks are concreted and all improvements are in place. Each lot in the tract is ready for the builder, having been laid out with a special view to its adaptability as a residence location.

In fact, the entire subdivision has been improved under the direction of competent engineers, landscapers and experts in the development of modern home communities, and all the improvements are modern in every particular.

Added to the improvements placed upon the property by the subdivision experts and engineers, nature has lavished many gifts upon this beautiful tract. Its rolling surface gives a gentle and graceful undulation to its streets and driveways, relieving the tedium of a perfectly level area, and permitting picturesque developments that would otherwise be impracticable or too expensive.

Near City's Business Center.

Its proximity to the center of the city, which is enhanced by the many fine driveways connecting Virginia Highlands with the down-town section, and its accessibility from all directions renders this location more than ever desirable to people who wish for the elegance and quietude of outlying districts, with all the advantages that could be enjoyed upon locations closer in.

Another advantage of this splendid location is the number of modern facilities for communication with the city and with other residence sections of Atlanta. There are, in addition to a number of jitney and motor buses several trolley lines running to this property, making it possible for residents in Virginia Highlands to arrive at and depart from the subdivision every few minutes throughout the day and until a late hour in the night.

The home sites in Virginia Highlands also have the advantage of proximity to several of the splendid high and grammar schools of the city system, several private schools that are well known to Atlanta people and to other educational and cultural institutions of the north side. It is close to parks, swimming pools, golf courses, tennis chourts, clubs and churches, and being a convenient distance from other well-known residence sections it will prove highly convenient to the socially-inclined, whose duties require accessibility to the more elegant homes of the city.

During a former selling campaign a number of the splendid building sites in Virginia Highlands were sold to well-known Atlanta people, and there have been many high-class modern residences erected in the big subdivision. These homes have added much to the beauty of the tract, which is restricted with reference to the type of houses that may be erected.

Big Selling Campaign.

The sales department of the Grant-Jeter company, under Clayton Burke, manager, proposes to dispose of every available lot that has been developed for building to date. During this intensive selling drive the company invites all prospective home builders and purchasers to inspect the property. Every assistance, it was stated, will be given those who are interested in looking over the property, the company being anxious to extend every possible courtesy to those inspecting the tract.

"If interested in the purchase of a home site," said Mr. Burke, "one that is located in the most advantageous way and equipped with every improvement, it is your duty to look at the lots in Virginia Highlands before closing a trade. We believe these lots are among the most desirable home sites yet available for development in or near the city of Atlanta, and we are sure that no greater intrinsic worth is offered prospective patrons in any portion of the city than in Virginia Highlands. Let us show you the lots, which speak for themselves in a more eloquent language than we are able to command."

Announcement is made that R. M. George, well known in Atlanta business circles, has joined the Dolvin Realty company. Mr. George has a wide acquaintance in Atlanta, having served for 10 or more years with W. A. McCullough company.

Announcing a total of more than $440,000 in sales, rentals and construction of buildings for the past few weeks the Logan Realty and Trust corporation gives a graphic evidence of the success of this well known firm, as well as of the remarkable activity of the Atlanta real estate market. This list of transactions, which includes residences, vacant lots, the leasing of uptown business property and the erection of a number of homes through the company's construction department, is one of the largest and most important real estate announcements of the season.

The Logan Realty and Trust corporation, whose offices are in the Atlanta Trust Company building, is headed by James L. Logan, who is perhaps the oldest realty man in the city, in point of business service. Mr. Logan is also one of the best known realtors in the city, having taken part in residential developments, business property transactions and other real estate deals since Atlanta was little more than a country town. Mr. Logan is president of the company, which succeeds James L. Logan, the name under which he operated his business in this city for many years, witnessing the growth of Atlanta from a small town to the greatest city in the southern states.

Other officers of the corporation are: Robert E. Carrigan, vice president and sales manager; Charles S. LeCraw, secretary; Miss Margaret L. Reeves, assistant secretary.

Handsome Realty Office.

The company, with one of the largest and most modernly appointed real estate offices in the city, is located at 607-612 the Atlanta Trust Company building, its business quarters occupying five large rooms on that floor. The operation of the big concern is affected by the division of the business into four departments, as follows: Sales, insurance, leases and construction. Over these departments the following officials preside, with large and efficient forces cooperating with them in the transaction of the company's business: Victor A. Moore, manager of the leasing department; Milton J. Warren, manager of the department of central properties; C. L. Barrett, manager of the insurance department, and Homer L. McDaniel and David R. Garner, managers of the construction department.

The home purchasers' saving department, which is an innovation in the local real estate circles, was designed, according to Mr. Logan, for the purpose of aiding prospective home builders in the most effective way to achieve their desires for a home at the least cost and with the least possible bother. "Our arrangement," said the realty man, "provides that after a man has laid up a nominal amount of money in savings we will undertake to buy him a lot and erect him a home. In other words ours in a service from the ground up, and we believe it will prove in every way satisfactory and beneficial to home builders."

The home purchaser's savings department, which is an unique and important feature of the company's business, is headed by W. J. Fielder, manager, with Miss Mary Mitchell, secretary; Herman Hafele, Miss Vonice Taylor and George H. Hayes, representatives. The sales department is made up of the following well-known business people, who have taken prominent parts in the big sales list announced by the company: Robert E. Carrigan, manager; Edgar C. Latta, O. F. Luttrell, Benjamin C. Pearson, H. R. Salter, L. H. Smith, M. L. Dunton, John H. Dobbs, B. F. Bales, J. C. Cross, John S. Madden, C. Robbins and L. Wilson.

The photograph of the personnel of the company is reproduced above, showing the entire staff, from President Logan through the various departments of the concern.

Moreland P.-T. A. Hears Helpful Talk by School Principal

The first meeting of the Moreland P.-T. A was opened in a gracious manner by the president, Mrs. J. C. McCord. A large and enthusiastic membership was present.

The recording secretary's chair being unfilled, Mrs. Nicholas B. Ellison was asked to fill the unexpired term of office. Mrs. Ellison has just returned to this school locality after an extended absence from the city. Miss Julia Harris, who was elected for this office, had resigned on account of excessive school duties.

Mrs. Black, the school principal, gave a talk along school lines and how parents could best be of help and cooperate with the teachers. She assured the parents every child would be well cared for from eight-thirty until dismissal—its needs properly looked after. In case of accidents or sickness the child was attended and if further treatment was needed the child was sent home. She asked that each child be given a medical examination for throat, eyes, teeth and physical condition by family physician if possible. She told of the loss of the janitor's personal effects by robbery and a voluntary contribution was given amounting to seven dollars and thirty-five cents.

The government hospital (No. 48) chairman, Mrs. Emile Brietenbucher, reported having collected a dollar and a half, which she wished to use to buy games for invalid soldiers.

The better-films chairman reported an educational picture to be shown at the local picture show every Friday and Saturday.

The following committee chairmen were appointed for the coming year. Program, Mrs. N. L. Barker; better films, Mrs. Earnest Deacon; house, Mrs. J. N. Hale; grounds, Mrs. Ed Pierce; relief, Mrs. Geo. Price; citizenship, Mrs. R. P. Smith; educational and library, Mrs. D. M. Holsenbeck; government hospital No. 48, Mrs. Emile Breitenbucher; child-welfare, Mrs. A. G. Stitt; membership, Mrs. E. C. Barfield; kindergarten, Mrs. Harold Cummings.

The count of grades represented showed the kindergarten to have the largest percentage present.

Mrs. McCord, president, stated that she expected to invite the mothers of each grade separately to her home during the year so they could have a better opportunity to know each other and the chairman and teacher of their grade."

After adjournment a social half hour was enjoyed.

Tech High P.-T. A. Launches Movement for New Buildings

The Tech High P.-T. A. at the first meeting of the year Friday night launched a movement to secure new buildings at the Grady High school for boys, sufficiently large to accommodate the more than a thousand boys who will enter the high schools from the junior highs in September.

As Boys' High and Tech High are separate schools occupying the same building, Dr. Thornwell Jacobs, president of the Tech High P.-T. A., will appoint a committee to confer with the Boys' High P.-T. A. and solicit their cooperation in securing this new unit. Only one unit of the Grady High has been completed and eight class rooms are already in portable buildings.

The feature of the meeting was the introduction by W. O. Cheney, principal of the school, of the coaches of the football team and thirteen letter men of last year who promise to make an even more formidable team than the one which won the championship of the City Prep league in 1923.

Claude Tolbert, who has made quite a record as coach, announced that the team would make trips to Little Rock and Dayton, Ohio, these games having been solicited by these cities on account of the splendid playing of Tech High teams in the past.

Coach T. L. Alexander secured the pledges of all patrons present to attend the games and give their active support to the team.

Glenn Holland, captain of the team, thanked those present for the warm reception tendered the team and introduced the following boys: Jack Thomason, otherwise known as "Stumpy;" Bob Randolf, Richard McConnell, Harold Rusk, Glenn Lautzenheiser, Carlton Parshall, William Rosenblatt, Bob Mayhew, Cliff Passons, Bob Goldsmith, Gordon Watkins, Russell Neunan and George S. Obear III.

A. A. Lacour, chairman of the athletic committee of the school, announced that special rates would be given the fathers and mothers attending the games.

George S. Obear, Jr., chairman of athletics of the P.-T. A., was given permission for an entertainment to raise money for blankets for the team. Mrs. W. O. Cheney will be chairman for the party.

W. O. Cheney congratulated the parents on the high percentages made in the true-false tests sent out to the patrons to arouse interest in the P.-T. A. meeting. Six classes tied for the prize for returning these intelligence tests and P. A. Ringsmith won a rooter's badge for every member of his class.

Mr. Cheney asked for the aid of the fathers and mothers in securing better scholarship and suggested that the parents stay at home with the boys four nights out of the week and encourage them to study. He also stated that the system of gold discs would be used again this year on the sleeves of boys who had passed in all subjects and that a purple star on the gold disc would designate the honor men.

Mr. Cheney stated that the parents of all boys would be welcomed at the school at any time and that close cooperation and acquaintance with the teachers would assist the boys materially.

Quick Way to Make Hair Beautifully Wavy

The heated iron makes the hair dry and parched looking, burns off the ends, giving a most untidy appearance. You who have learned this from experience will be glad to hear of a very simple method which is open to none of the objections referred to and which gives better results than the curling iron for either bobbed or long hair.

Just get a few ounces of plain liquid silmerine at your druggist's and apply a little with a brush before doing up the hair. Your hair will be as beautifully wavy and curly as though Mother Nature did it, and it will be quite manageable, no matter what style of coiffure you adopt. The effect will be much prettier than if you used a waving iron, will last much longer, and the health of your hair will not suffer. Silmerine is not sticky or greasy, but is quite pleasant to use.—(adv.)

BURGLARS FOILED AS WOMAN WEARS DIAMONDS TO BED

When burglars entered the home of Mr. and Mrs. Stoney Drake, of 35 Palisades road, early Saturday morning, with the intention of making away with $15,000 worth of diamonds, they found that their plans had been thwarted, for Mrs. Drake, acting on a premonition, had worn the valuable jewelry when she retired.

Mrs. Drake, in relating the story of how the burglars cut out the plate glass window to gain entrance to her home, told how on Friday morning she had missed the diamonds from their accustomed place, and later found them in a part of the house where she knew she had not left them. She declared that she had no idea how they were misplaced, but that her fears and suspicions were aroused, and, consequently, she had worn the jewels when she retired Friday night.

DeKalb County P.-T. Council Holds Meeting in Decatur

The DeKalb County P.-T. A. council held its regular meeting Wednesday, September 24, at the Decatur High school. Mrs. John deSaussure presided and Mrs. John Ridley acted as secretary.

In spite of the inclement weather nine schools were represented — Stone Mountain, Clarkston, six from Decatur and Emory Grammar school, thirty members being present.

After the usual business, Mrs. de Saussure expressed a desire that the DeKalb County P.-T. A. council should become affiliated with the State P.-T. A. It was moved and carried that an amendment be made to clause three of the constitution so that a nominal sum might be collected from each association to be paid to the state treasurer as a fee of membership.

Mrs. Arthur Tufts, state chairman of program, gave a very helpful talk on programs for the coming year, and explained and distributed booklets prepared by her outlining a plan for study and discussion month by month. She emphasized the importance of encouraging mothers to discuss their own problems, especially, when a speaker had made an opportunity for such a discussion.

Mrs. Jones, county maternity and child welfare nurse for the DeKalb county school clinic, showed very concisely the importance of pre-school work and assured the pre-school chairman of each P.-T. A. in DeKalb county her full cooperation in their health program, and also showed how they could help her in caring for mothers and babies who needed the aid of the clinic.

Dr. Harrison, county health physician, made an excellent report on the work accomplished by the clinic in benefiting the county school children. Four hundred and forty-two children had been treated and 702 defects had been corrected during the summer. Most of these cases were treated free and a small fee was asked of those who were able to bear such expense.

The members of the council felt fully compensated for any help the P.-T. A. had given the clinic after such a report, and agreed to give their hearty support to it in the future.

A discussion was opened as to the proper lunches for school children during recess. Mrs. Le Hardy, from Junior High, Decatur, explained how they had solved the problem at Junior High and gave the council an account of visiting other schools that had emphasized the importance of making school lunches nutritious, and have a menu that would provide a well balanced diet for less than ten cents.

Mrs. Clem Jolly, president of Clarkston P.-T. A., made the following report for the nominating committee: President for 1924-1925, Mrs. Arthur Tufts, Emory; vice president, Mrs. Wheat Williams, Decatur; secretary-treasurer, Mr. E. G. Beverly, Clarkston. The officers were unanimously elected.

Mrs. Tufts made a graceful speech of acceptance and outlined her plan for the council during the coming year.

The council adjourned to meet again the fourth Wednesday in January, the place to be announced later.

Mrs. Coleman Elected President Williams P.-T. A.

On Thursday afternoon, September 18, the Williams Street School Parent-Teacher association held its first meeting of the season. There was no regular program, as the usual business routine of electing officers and appointing committees took up most of the time.

A matter of regret to all present was the resignation of Mrs. H. M. Perkerson as president, owing to the fact that she has moved from the school district. She will be greatly missed, as she was an active member of the association, a regular attendant and an earnest worker.

The new officers for this year are Mrs. J. D. Coleman, president; Mrs. W. H. McChestney, vice president; Mrs. J. C. Turner, treasurer; Mrs. K. F. Herder, secretary.

After the count of those present was taken, Miss Ellen Kendrick's kindergarten class was awarded the prize money, having had the greatest number of representatives.

Before the meeting adjourned Miss Beulah Adamson, teacher of third grade II, graciously sang two popular selections, which were much enjoyed.

Bradley, Mrs. Chandler and Mrs. C. Freeman; publicity committee, Mrs. V. L. Bryant and Mrs. W. E. Bradley; social committee, Mrs. J. H. Dooley, chairman.

Wall, an introduction of teachers both old and new, by Miss Wesley, and a musical trio by members of the normal class, an interesting and instructive program was given by several teachers. A group of songs by Miss Nina Morgan completed the program.

Miss Houghton's work will be that of providing information and counsel to girls and women in regard to their educational and vocational problems, which will be closely coordinated with vocational guidance work in public schools and with that of the school improvement bureau.

The Atlanta office of the Southern Woman's Educational alliance was opened last January for work preparatory to its public opening and since that time has been busy collecting and filing information in regard to occupations open to women in Atlanta and Georgia; training available here and scholarships, loans and facilities for self-aid for students seeking an education.

SEEK ETERNAL THINGS:—We look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen: for the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal.—II Corinthians 4:18.

A WORD OF WARNING.

The following letter from Herbert E. Choate, treasurer of the J. K. Orr Shoe company, which is one of Atlanta's largest shippers, not only indorses The Constitution's contention that the railroads of this country are making a serious mistake by their policy of gradually "edging up" on their demands but gives the roads some sound advice that they should heed before the tide of reaction is too heavy to stem.

Mr. Choate says:

"Editor Constitution: Your editorial of the 24th inst., entitled 'Riding to a Fall,' is both useful and timely. It strikes a vibrant chord among the shippers of the state and should commend itself to the heedful attention of those responsible for the policies of the transportation lines of the country.

"For the last few years the railroads have been sedulously and systematically cultivating the good will and cooperation of the shippers and had so well succeeded in this more rational policy that business men generally were demanding that the transportation lines not only be treated fairly but be given every chance to earn a reasonable return upon their invested capital: but unless they temper some of their present policies with something of that 'sweet reasonableness' which they have asked the public to exercise towards them, it is to be feared that they will not only imperil the good will and confidence they have been striving to promote, but will bring down upon their devoted heads a violent reaction to the old days of railroad bating, fraught as it was with economic and political evils to both public and transportation lines, that is painful to contemplate.

"It is therefore to be hoped that your warning will find its way to the inner consciousness of those gentlemen who direct the larger policies of the transportation lines and that it will prove salutary alike to their interests and to those of the public."

H. E. CHOATE.

A few years ago every demagogic politician in this country centered fire on the railroads. It was a fertile field for votes. This situation brought the railroads to an appeal to the conservative and constructive thought of the nation to save them from a prejudiced public opinion. The sound business interests of the country came to their assistance and readily and whole-heartedly met them in a spirit "of good will and cooperation," to which Mr. Choate refers.

When the roads were turned back to their private owners after governmental operation during the World war the people, led by the great shipping and traveling interests, readily agreed to allow them such increased rates and concessions as they would legitimately require to rehabilitate their properties. The Pullman surcharge of 50 per cent of the standard Pullman fare—to go exclusively to the roads as a plus to their standard mileage fares—was thus agreed to, almost without opposition in congress. Other concessions were granted. It was agreed and so stipulated in the legislation that the temporary accretions, over and above the normal, should be abolished by order of the interstate commerce commission, which is supposed to be a governmental regulatory agency to protect the people, at such times as the railroads had been restored to their normal financial conditions.

For three years or more the railroads have not only been operating with enormously increased business and earnings and improved equipments, but they have not been required to increase their track mileage, and have had no extensive programs of extensions and developments.

In spite of all of this the railroads, instead of releasing the special concessions granted for the special purpose of rehabilitating them, have, and are, not only fighting for their retention, but by a process of slowly and—even slyly—tightening the screws, as illustrated by their unfair policy of destroying water competition at the expense of interior points, and other tariffs equally and as flagrantly unjust, are calling upon themselves a condemnation that will grow into a cataclysm if they continue to ignore the warnings.

This gradual "edging up" at the expense of the travelers and shippers of this country will not go unnoticed. It is the trump card that keeps La Follette in the game today with a policy of railroad radicalism that will ruin the railroads and the country if adopted. The railroads themselves are chiefly responsible for it.

A SERIOUS PROBLEM.

So many crimes are being committed these days by mere children, as to illustrate, the 14-year-old axe-murderer of Columbia, S. C., who hacked his aunt to death, and seriously and perhaps fatally wounded her two children; and others of equal or less horror, recorded almost daily in the newspapers, that the adult conscience of the country is being aroused as to its own unmistakable responsibility.

There are perhaps many causes assignable for the laxity of moral stamina among the young people.

In Atlanta a day or two ago two boys of 18, of good families, were arrested for driving an automobile while intoxicated. They were, in their drunk-crazed condition, both attempting to drive the machine at the same time, and in its wild rampage of zig-zagging several people were hurt, or terrorized, and the machine finally came to the end of a perilous journey by running into an immovable object.

The increase in the consumption of alcoholic drinks among young men is alarming.

Not only are boys of tender years drinking to excess, thereby making their moral instincts callous, but it too often happens that girls are lured by the hip-pocket flask, coupled with the automobile joy ride, and the laxity of parental restraint.

To this may be added the public dance hall, in many of which there is not the right kind, or certainly inadequate, chaperonage.

Again, the lack of coordination of a child's brain with its hand, due to parental indulgence and failure of proper discipline, is another. The brain frequently is not properly trained to direct the hand, and the latter becomes wild, careless, indifferent, indolent, through this lack of proper mental directing force.

In the swing of popular sentiment against the extremity of old-time parental intolerance, the pendulum has undoubtedly gone too far.

In the present age of political and civic and business activities, involving the time of both the men and the women, the children have in too many cases gone undisciplined until their attributes of mind and body and heart and soul have become unbalanced, the one out of harmony with another.

And then, the force of influence is a great factor.

In this respect the picture producer is not without his share of responsibility with the parent who permits a child to thus become obsessed with the too often displayed allurements of sin.

The problem or sex drama on the screen may carry its moral, but the girl-child sees more the glamor and the tinsel of the primrose.

The boy-child sees in the blood-and-thunder melodramas of the old west the reward of daring—perhaps of daring in violation of law—and the cowboy bandit becomes more of a hero in the youthful mind than the sheriff who feebly pursues him.

It is a serious problem—this wave of crime among the young people—and it is a problem that ought to be dealt with at once, firmly and in the light of duty rather than of impulse.

COLOMBIA LEADS.

A striking indication of the great changes which are taking place in South America is shown by the fact that Colombia is the first nation in the world to connect all of its principal centers by air mail service. In a country of rugged mountainous regions, tropical swamps and few roads the air mail service has wrought a startling transformation.

An official report says:

"Seaplanes thread its jungle rivers. Land planes hurdle the northern extensions of the Andes. A night-flying trans-continental service has revolutionized time schedules. Air mail postage is 30 cents the half-ounce.

"Not the least interesting of the achievements of the Colombian air establishment is the feat in surveying heretofore impenetrable swamps and jungles from the air.

"Six seaplanes following the tortuous course of the Magdelena river and three land planes vaulting the mountain ranges reduce communication to hours as contrasted with days, and even weeks, by shallow draft steamer, railway or pack team. Planes have traversed in seventy minutes inaccessible trails that mule packs took four days to pass."

Constructed first for carrying passengers the Colombian seaplanes were soon adopted for cargo work and the mail service was added later. It will thus be seen that all the difficulties of freight, passenger and mail service in a country destitute of roads and in which the building of roads would be expensive, have been surmounted at one bound by the introduction of air navigation, and a socalled backward country is proving itself to be a leader in a most impressive way.

WHAT WILL WE DO?

The New York Times emphasizes the sound, steady and unmistakable development of the world peace protocol, now in process of preparation at Geneva, as follows:

"Step by step the league of nations in its meeting at Geneva is moving toward the abolition of war. This does not mean that it could prevent or stop a civil war like that now raging in China. Nor could it render impossible hostilities in Ireland, either between North and South, or between an Ireland asserting entire independence and a government fighting to preserve the integrity of the empire. But wars between nations, all those forms of international conflict which have so many times desolated the world, it is planned by the league to drive into a corner whence they cannot escape. There has been much loose talk about 'outlawing war.' The league is trying to translate the phrase into a reality. The best brains at Geneva have for weeks been working on a protocol which even non-members may be asked to sign, and which would, so far as human ingenuity and good will can do it, make wars between nations virtually impossible."

And what will the American government do about it? Will it join with the other great nations of the world, even Germany, in abolishing war between nations? Will it accept its own international peace plan—for it is an American's plan that is being evolved—in order that the serenity of the world may not again be torn and disturbed by war? Or, will it join the bolsheviks of Russia and the revolutionists of Turkey in a policy of isolation and resentment at the foremost ideal of Christian civilization? It must do one or the other.

And what will those irreconcilables in the senate, who have preached loud and long about "outlawing war," but who have obstructed every path to that end, do about it?

What will Senator Borah, one of the really brilliant men of congress whose sincerity of judgment, even in so serious an error, has never been questioned, do about it?

What will the secretary of state, Mr. Hughes, who is an able and good man, and one of the nation's strongest advocates of world peace, do about it? He believed in the league of nations in those early and untried days before its accomplishments had begun to unfold, but unfortunately he subverted a personal conviction to what he subsequently believed would be a party expediency. Can he renounce this first practical, tangible, workable method for peace?

What will President Coolidge, who pleaded for world peace in a recent letter of greetings to the American Legion, do about it? He has said that participation in the league is "a closed incident." Will he be broad-minded enough to admit that the league has found a way? If it comes to him, as the head of this great nation's government, bearing the gift of world peace, will he spurn it? Will he allow political prejudices to control him in the most potential eventuality since the Prince of Peace came to save a sinful world?

These are potential questions and—either by deed or voice—they must shortly be met.

"BELLED BUZZARDS."

How many "belled buzzards" has Georgia had? That seems to be about as hard to answer as the time-honored query of, How old is Ann?

From the day the first printing press was set up in Georgia "the" belled buzzard—or a series of them—has furnished an abundance of copy when other things went dull. In the days of our boyhood we read of "the" belled buzzard floating, or flopping as the case might be, around all over Georgia with occasional side trips into Alabama and Tennessee. In the days of Joel Chandler Harris and Saint Claire Abrams the belled buzzard was regarded as belonging to the singular number. He was just "one" buzzard, and therefore he was regarded as a strange and ominous wanderer of the skies when the tones of his little bell came tinkling down from among the clouds.

His bell was heard one day at Jonesboro and the next day at Gainesville, and on one occasion he was reported to have serenaded the people of Warrenton and LaGrange on the same day. Divers persons got their names in print by claiming that they had tied the bell on the buzzard and there were long discussions of the kind of bell he wore. Some thought that on account of the melodious tones of the bell it must be made of silver, and a veteran cow herder of the north Georgia mountains who said that he was an expert on both bells and buzzards offered to bet six dollars that the bell was made of an alloy of copper, tin, zinc and iron. He said he knew for he had once used such a bell on one of his cows and it sounded so much like the buzzard's bell that the buzzard actually came down and alighted on the cow's back.

Men may come and men may go—or stay as the case may be—but "the" belled buzzard, or a new installment of him—goes on forever. The last heard of him—or them—was at the flourishing village of Antioch, in Whitfield county.

THE COTTON SUPPLY.

The world's diminishing cotton supply is treated at length in the current issue of the Country Gentleman by Theodore H. Price. Mr. Price looks at the situation from the standpoint of the manufacturer and proceeds to scold the southern farmer and his tenants for what looks to Mr. Price like a conspiracy to restrict the output of American cotton.

According to Mr. Price, it is not the ravages of the boll weevil or the movement of colored labor from the southern farms to the industrial cities of the north that has cut down the production of cotton, but a growing disinclination of the southern white farmers to work. Mr. Price says:

"That the decline in the production of cotton is not due to the removal of negro labor is shown by the fact that more than half of the cotton supply is produced in Texas and Oklahoma where negroes constitute less than 14 per cent of the population. But there is no denying the fact that raising coton is hard work for white men. And as their economic condition has improved, the white people of the south have become more and more unwilling to undertake the grilling toil in the hot sun that the intensive cultivation of cotton requires.

"And a large yield per acre presupposes intensive work in fighting the weeds and the boll weevil. For such work there is no longer much incentive or inclination. The land owner and his tenant have become convinced that they will get more for a small crop than a large one.

"This being the case, it seems unlikely that there will be anything more than a fortuitous increase in cotton production of the United States in the near future. As a result of exceptionally favorable weather, an exceptionally large yield may be occasionally obtained, but it will be the exception rather than the rule, for the south is no longer compelled to grow cotton and is finding it easier as well as more profitable to employ its energies otherwise."

Under these circumstances, Mr. Price states that it is but natural to assume that the world's supply of cotton can be augmented by inducing its production in other countries. He is compelled to admit the fact, however, that most of the land outside the United States adapted to the production of cotton lacks both water and labor, and that irrigation requires large investments of capital and the knowledge of cotton culture cannot be learned in less than a generation. Therefore it is not to be expected that any considerable supply of cotton will come from Asia, Africa or South America for many years, if ever.

Mr. Price is therefore compelled to admit that the world must still look to the southern states for the bulk of its cotton supply, but suggests the development of synthetic cotton, flax, or other substitutes, and significantly adds:

"If this can be accomplished, or if artificial silk or a synthetic cotton can be used to fill the vacuum created by the underproduction of natural cotton in the United States, it will be well for the world's textile industry and those who are dependent upon it."

When Mr. Price states that the southern farmer is no longer willing to do the work required to make cotton, he is wrong. The farmer is willing to work for an adequate return for his labor. He is not willing—and Mr. Price cannot blame him for that—to plant and work ten acres of land for one bale of cotton as sometimes happens under extreme boll weevil conditions. Give the southern farmer ample return for his labor and he will do his share in keeping the world adequately supplied with cotton.

And now comes a scientist who predicts that a thousand years of life will be the outlook for the individual human race. Some one is always trying to take the joy out of the undertaker's life.

A visitor from abroad says that the American language is now spoken pretty much everywhere in Paris. Doubtless it is just American money that talks.

This authoritative word from the Philadelphia Record: "If your heart and lungs are sound you need not worry—unless you're a motorist; in which case you must look to your lights."

"The down-trodden farmer" is up and about now, holding his own and demanding what has been coming to him so long, with a far better prospect of getting it.

And now Secretary Wilbur says he "didn't say nothing at all, at all."

Whatever coal deposits there may be at the North Pole, it will be some time before we use it as a coaling station.

An actress who met the prince socially says he "has nothing but horse-talk." But it is admitted that he also has horse-sense.

The Thorn-Deep Way

BY FRANK L. STANTON.

The wound o' the thorn where the loved flowers throng,
And the grief that is given a heart with a song;
And Life, tempest-driven,
Where sad skies hide heaven,
And the way that is weary, the night that is long.

Sing to me, Sorrow,
When dark the storms fall,
The friend that remaineth—
The one friend of all!

The tears o' the years with their hopes and their fears,
Where a cross to the end of the journey Life bears;
A shadow-veiled cross
Where Life's gain is Love's loss,
And Love sees not heaven through the rain of its tears.

Sing to me, Sorrow,
When fast the tears fall,
The friend that remaineth—
The one friend of all!

THE WORLD'S WINDOW

BY PIERRE VAN PAASSEN.

Holland and Russia.

The bonds that bind men of science are universal. They have no boundaries nor frontiers. Word comes from Holland of the formation of a society which has for its object the reception, training and equipment of Russian students. Professor Treub and the burgomaster of The Hague, Mijnheer H. F. Patijn, are at the head of the movement to give Russian boys who belong to the middle and upper classes of that country a chance to finish their education, something which is denied them by the soviet authorities. No one can foresee at the present time what great historical role Holland will play again in the rebuilding of the huge Russian domain. Peter the Great laid the foundations of his great empire on the basis of Dutch culture. He came to Holland himself, worked in the shipyards of Zaandam and Amsterdam as a common carpenter, learned geometry and kindred sciences and when he finally left for his own country he took with him a small army of Dutch building experts, scholars, musicians, architects and sailors. Within a few years after his return Peter appeared on the Baltic with a fleet and defeated the Swedes, while before his return Russia had not a single ship.

Toscha, "A Son Of Heaven."

No longer need one doubt the legendary charm that is contained in music. The experience of Orpheus, in mythology, who made the rocks and stones come under the intoxicating influence of his divine art, has practically been repeated in modern days by a modern musician, Toscha Seidel, the young Berlin violinist. While on a tour of Australia and New Zealand, Seidel made a side trip to the South Sea islands. Here, on a little-known small island, he played before the court of a native queen, whose father had just died. The courtiers and other natives fell on their knees to pray Seidel to stay with them. As an inducement they offered him the crown of the kingdom and the beautiful queen added her personal requests to marry her and live forever in the bliss of a heaven-kissed and zephyr-fanned island. Toscha had some difficulty in breaking away, we are told. Even when he was back on shipboard he could hear the voices of the natives calling him and pleading to return "O son of heaven."

Settling Old Scores.

Hungarian newspapers are making a great ado about the forthcoming trials of Count Karolyi and Bela Kuhn. Of course both men are far away from Budapest, but that will not keep the courts from holding the trials by proxy. Karolyi, liberal with socialist tendencies, was at the helm of affairs in Hungary during the latter part of the war. He was what is commonly known by the patriots and supernationalists as a "defeatest," that is to say he believed Hungary could have obtained favorable terms from the allied powers if she had sued for a separate peace. When popular opinion did not uphold him in this contention, he relinquished the reigns of government, with the result that Bela Kuhn, a communist, seized the opportunity to establish a dictatorship of the proletariat. The red regime lasted until Rumania invaded the country and chased out the bolshevists. Both Count Karolyi and Bela Kuhn are charged with responsibility for that time of chaos and the hated Rumanian invasion. That trip of the Rumanian armies into Hungary when the communists were slaughtered in their thousands has not been forgotten by Russia, and some day that score will also be settled.

His Own Knew Him Not.

Some ignorance is both amusing and deplorable. Prospective teachers at Fond du Lac, Wis., answering questions in an identification test showed such a total lack of knowledge of every-day events and names that have become almost household words in this country, that one almost fears for the children who are to sit at the feet of such Gamaliels. Teapot Dome, according to one student, was "an old tomb discovered in Egypt about a year ago." Herrin was "a title used in Germany;" Pinchot, "a race horse;" Obregon, "a province in Germany;" De Valera, "a Mexican bandit;" Henry Cabot Lodge, "a place where societies meet;" Venizelos, "a country in South America," Muscle Shoals, "a great coal mine in Italy;" Steinmetz, "a kind of piano;" Firpo, "an African prizefighter;" Henry Ford, "one who ran for president but backed out." The worst for Wisconsin is the answer by a girl, who admitted she had lived all her life in that state. "Who is La Follette?" To this question she answered: "A Frenchman who came to America during the war."

"Missing Link" Seen?

In "De Tropische Natur," a Dutch publication, J. Van Herwaarden tells of a singular experience he had on a small island near the coast of Sumatra. While hunting wild boars he saw a creature walking in an open clearing in the jungle. Its arms were long, but did not have the length of those of an ourang-outang. Its head was covered with long, flowing hair, but the face was bare. It had a nose that resembled a Zulu's, regular teeth, and quiet, steady eyes, not the shifty, nervous kind of an ape. When Van Harwaarden leveled his gun at the creature it wailed, but presently made off, making a hissing sound. Anthropologists the world over are excited over the possibility that the Dutchman has stumbled on the "missing link" that is to connect man with ape-like ancestors. The governor general of the Dutch Indies has ordered a detachment of troops to investigate the strange creatures and bring one of them to Batavia in captivity. Van Herwaarden writes that he could not bring himself to shoot at the creature. It seemed too much like murder. Those colonial troops of Holland, with their Atjeh and Sumatra records, will have no such qualms of conscience.

THE INDIANA OF CHINA

Manchuria, Pekin, Shanghai and many other place names that appear in reports of China's civil strife are well known to Americans. Not so Chekiang, home province of Tuchun Lu and a large part of his forces who are defending Shanghai.

"In some respects Chekiang is the Indiana of China," says a bulletin from the Washington, D. C., headquarters of the National Geographic society. "Indeed its area approximates that of the Hoosier state, though it has a population as dense as that of Rhode Island. Like Indiana, also, it has diverse industries and is not dominated by any one great city, as is the case with Kiangsu, to its north, where Shanghai overshadows provincial life.

"True, Chekiang has Hangchow, ancient Chinese capital and erstwhile center of statecraft and learning. And, although Hangchow's white silk is the prize goods of America's fashionable shops, the city's principal interest for the traveler is in its scenic beauties and historic shrines.

"Beside Hangchow, Chekiang also has Shaohing, famed for a liquor brewed from the waters of a local lake; the waning treaty port of Ningpo; mountain-bound Huchow, scene of a three-year siege by Taiping rebels, and Kashing, celebrated egg center. Poultry, like silk, essentially is a home industry and some families use an artificial process to hatch 50,000 or more eggs a year.

"From the Kashing region of Chekiang comes pitan, esteemed by epicures from all over China. Pitan consists of ducks' eggs preserved in a mixture of lime, salt and rice hulls, during which process the white of the egg solidifies and takes on a greenish black color and a taste which is conceded to be incomparable, both by those who like it and by those who do not.

Fighting Differently.

"A peculiar feature of the fighting of Chekiang troops reported in dispatches is the firing or rifles and artillery into the skies. The Chinese are believed to have invented gun powder, but they still use it more effectively for fireworks than for projectiles. In war, as in peace, the Chinese are philosophical. In a previous war between a Hangchow army and their northern neighbors history records that it rained on the day of a scheduled battle. The Hangchow commanders sent a request to the opposing general asking that fighting be postponed until the weather was more favorable. The arrangement was mutually agreeable.

"Chekiang is the third most densely populated province of crowded China, and the burden of supporting its 17,000,000 is thrown on the fertile plains of its north. Its people thin out appreciably among the mountains in the west and south. These wooded mountains, many rivers dotted with groups of tiny islands and the Grand canal which terminates at Hangchow, all go to make the province one of the most picturesque in eastern China.

"The farmer, and even the farmhand, of Chekiang is highly respected. Cultivation is intense, but modern implements or fertilizers have small chance of adoption because the farmers are too poor to buy them. In the social scale of Chekiang the soldier ranks below the farmer. Frequently the soldier is a family outcast and the haphazard character of much of the fighting in the present skirmishes may arise from the fact that the discipline of the army is much less rigorous than that of the soil.

"Both farming and fighting are handicapped by the complete absence of any roads. There are only paths, worn by plodding oxen, charabaos and coolies.

"Here and there, in Chekiang's fierce struggle for rice to eat and silk to sell, traces of its ancient aristocracy remain.

The "Cabarets" of Hangchow.

"West Lake, just west of Hangchow, retains the natural beauties which won high praise from Marco Polo. There, of an evening, a Hangchow gentleman entertains his friends on a sumptuous house-boat, as they lounge on divans, and eat dishes of a kind which, in all probability, Marco Polo tasted. For the chefs of these floating 'cabarets' pride themselves on serving menus that were famous in centuries long past.

"The ceremony for an evening's entertainment has an etiquette as rigid as the tea ceremony of Japan. At certain points in the lake tour the host must acclaim the charm of the 'beautiful views.' This is not a spontaneous matter at all; the views are numbered and named. Their names lend poetry to what seems a perfunctory method of enjoying natural scenery. One is 'The Winding Hall of Fragrant Breezes;' another is 'Willow Bay Where Eagles Are Heard;' No. 10 is 'Two Cloud Piercing Peaks.'

"The host also must engage entertainers. These are the 'Sing-Song Girls.' No more in Hangchow than in New York would an 'artist' walk to a dinner party when she was to perform. But her 'taxi' gives the western guest a moment's surprise. She arrives at the water's edge astride a coolie's back.

"Though Hangchow has streets the coolie still is the more economical carrier. His two-wheel carts can handle from two to four tons, depending on the bulk. His back can bear a corpulent merchant, so that a run across town with a dainty 'Sing-Song Girl' is a welcome relief. And he, with his wife and his children, are cheaper than donkey engines to operate the locks on the Grand canal. For boat power he and his oars compete only with the cost of sails to catch the winds."

Breaking Into the Big Show

A Sigh for the Embryo Duse

BY O. O. M'INTYRE

This is the season of disillusionment and despair for the young Main street maid who has come to New York to carve for herself a slice of Broadway's opulence.

Hundreds of them are bumping their noses against theatrical office doors to chase coy and elusive fame. They come fresh with diplomas from correspondence schools of elocution. They come from department stores. They come from factories. They come from peaceful homes. They come from everywhere.

And about one in every one hundred will have even a frail chance to pass the barriers.

It has become the custom when a girl in Ridge Crossing wins the beauty prize at the Merchants' carnival to pack the kit-bag and come bursting upon New York hugging the big dream.

She imagines that Ziegfeld, Gest, Shubert or Belasco will be at the station to meet her. She finds that mother's trepidations were realized. She is alone and jobless in a big city.

To seek honors without experience on the New York stage is the most difficult task in the world. A pretty face may do a little, but it is a minor qualification. The art of theater make-up and lighting can make a beauty of a crone.

The unskilled have as much chance of overnight fame as a soda jerker has of a sudden desire to remove his white apron and build a Brooklyn bridge.

Social workers say that more than 90 per cent of the untrained girls who come to New York to go on the stage are forced to take obscure jobs or return home.

And still they come—an eager, tramping army. Not a week passes without one of them attempting to slip away into the waters of the Hudson, quaffing a poison potion or turning on the gas. So far this season there have been six suicides among the despairing and heartsick.

Few Good Schools.

There are a few dramatic schools in New York that develop talent, but most of them are worthless. All the student has at the end of the course is a diploma not worth the paper it is printed upon. Yet these schools are all filled. Most of them have a waiting list.

But there are, one might say, girls being selected for the stage every day in New York. It is true, but 90 per cent of them are girls who have had training in stock in smaller cities. They also come from cabaret revues, and sad to relate, a large number are those who have gentlemen friends who have "pulls" with producers.

Thus the girl with merely a pretty face and ambition has a very small chance of landing a small part or a place in the front row.

Broadway is always in need of elfs for the theatrical caverns. But they are not selected from those who are merely trying to realize youthful dreams.

The way for a girl to begin is in the smaller cities with stock companies. They become automatons. Training is not especially needed. And it is a fallacy that extra girls have a better chance for the legitimate stage. It does not add one iota to their value among theatrical producers.

The tragedy of young girls coming to New York untrained is in the lure that New York offers. Once here, they are never willing to confess failure and return home. They remain on and on—spurred by various press agent abracadabra of the sudden big opportunity knocking at obscure doors.

This chance success rarely, if ever, happens. The stage is as much a business as any other highly specialized profession. And the idea that lightning often strikes unexpectedly is as ridiculous as the idea that a truck driver is suddenly called upon to become a great industrial executive.

The best advice for the inexperienced girl who plans to descend upon New York from the provinces is the same advice of the Englishman to the man about to be married—Don't.

Pity of Their Plight.

One sees the pity of their plight in the rounds of the theatrical agencies on the streets running off Broadway. They sit waiting in ante-rooms from morning until night—hoping against hope. Some are actually hungry and clothes are frayed from the long and hopeless travail.

They will not seek other employment for fear that they may not be present at the right moment. Some of them come to the agencies with their lunches.

Recently one theatrical producer as a sort of press agent stunt broadcast his demand for 108 girls for a musical revue. He did not know what he had let himself in for. His mail came in basketfuls from every hamlet, farm, town and city in the country. And more than 200 girls—just on a slender chance—made the trip to New York. He could not use any of them and had to barricade himself in another office to dodge the hordes.

In preparing choruses for musical shows, the stage director has formulated his own idea of the girls he wants before he sends out his call for them. Each director has his string of trained girls and he gives them preference because it makes his task easier and the result better.

The present season is to be a season of dancing numbers. In these numbers especially are the experienced girls needed. Just to be a good dancer means very little. One must know the technique of the stage, the art of make-up and be physically able to endure the killing grind of all day and all night rehearsals.

Even the untrained girls who do manage to land jobs face the weeding out process after the show is ready for production. They may rehearse for several weeks and find themselves "at liberty" before the premiere.

They will find also that there is little sympathy for their plight among producers. It is a cold-hearted group. They gamble for high stakes and to throw girls out of jobs does not bother them one whit.

Convention and Hospitality

BY M. ASHBY JONES, D.D.

Atlanta is a great convention town. Each year witnesses an increased number of organizations which come to us for their annual meeting. It would be interesting to know the variety of these organizations and how completely in their circled interests they represent American life. They include every commercial, educational, aesthetic, artistic, social and religious interest. Naturally the people who come as delegates represent a certain preferred leadership in these lines of thought and activity. What a rich contribution they should make to our city life.

Atlanta is an attractive city. With its splendid railroad connections, climate, beautiful location, varied facilities for entertainment and recreation, it is easy to get people to come to see us. But why do we want these people to come to see us? Of course, their coming means the immediate expenditure of large sums of money, and this, in itself, is a perfectly legitimate commercial motive. But, even beyond this immediate gain, we wish these people to go away from Atlanta with such a favorable impression of our city that they will want to return, either as visitors or permanent residents, and tell others of our advantages and virtues. This will depend upon the kind of hospitality which we extend.

Our Guests.

Of course, each organization which comes represents some very serious purpose. Many of them have honorable histories, sentiments and traditions. The delegates of all of them are, for the time being, conscious of their particular organizations, and their minds are filled with its plans and its purposes. From this standpoint, I can't help thinking of the many welcome addresses, which I have heard Atlantans make to these conventions. These speeches are usually filled with the glory and the virtues of Atlanta. The history of our past, the miracle of our present, and the unsurpassed dreams of our future, are told in vivid and purple rhetoric. The object would seem to be to impress the visitors with the very great honor and privilege which is being conferred upon them by being allowed to meet in such a wonderful place as Atlanta. One has only to suggest the analogy of a host welcoming a guest into his private home, by telling him what a wonderful house he has, the honorable genealogy of his family, and how he expects to be an even greater man in the years to come.

It seems to be needless to say that true hospitality would express the sense of honor which the city feels in welcoming the distinguished guests. Should we not learn something of the virtues and achievements of those whom we entertain, and dwell rather upon the privilege which comes to Atlanta, of having them within our gates? The music of Atlanta's praise would be very much more beautiful, if the trumpet were placed on the lips of our guests. I feel like apologizing for even suggesting the rather selfish motive, that this course would be infinitely better policy. Our purpose is to make our guests have "a good time." Human nature enjoys being admired very much more than it does being called upon to admire others. And it is only fair. This convention of salesmen, educators, or what-not, have come here on their particular enterprise, and it is their day. It is good sportsmanship to magnify their purpose by making them the theme.

The Ideal Host.

But I am really thinking of that larger and richer advantage, which we should receive from the coming of these strangers into our life. The very variety of enterprises, interests and ideals, which are represented in these conventions, might make a tremendous contribution to the broadening of our interests and sympathies, if we attentively listen to what they have to say. It is needless to say that the man who insists upon talking about himself and his own interests, learns little of other people and their interests. It is also a truism to say that by expressing a sympathetic interest in the plans and purposes of others they give back to us their best.

When these many distinguished and significant people come to see us, of course, we must give them an opportunity to see our city under pleasant conditions, but very much more important than "showing them Atlanta," is to have them show us what they have seen and found to be worth in the world. Yes, I am enthusiastically in favor of inviting them to come to Atlanta, but after they come, let us "invite their souls"—lure them to an expression of their best.

WEEKLY BIBLE TALK

The Choice of the Twelve

BY WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN

Text of Today's Bible Talk by Mr. Bryan.

(Matthew 10:1-8)

And when he had called unto him his twelve disciples, he gave them power against unclean spirits, to cast them out, and to heal all manner of sickness and all manner of disease.

Now the names of the twelve apostles are these: The first, Simon, who is called Peter, and Andrew his brother; James the son of Zebedee, and John, his brother; Philip, and Bartholomew; Thomas, and Matthew the publican; James the son of Alphaeus, whose surname was Thaddeus;

Simon the Canaanite, and Judas Iscariot, who also betrayed him.

These twelve Jesus sent forth and commanded them, saying, Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not:

But go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel.

And as ye go, preach, saying, The kingdom of heaven is at hand.

Heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out devils: freely ye have received, freely give.

We deal today with the commissioning of the twelve apostles.

In the first verse of our text, the twelve are called disciples: "And when he had called unto him his twelve disciples."

In the next verse they are called apostles: "Now the names of the twelve apostles are these."

They were first followers, then representatives.

Commentators call attention to the fact that the twelve are named by Matthew, by Mark, by Luke in his gospel, and by him also in the Acts. In each place Peter is mentioned first. And emphasis is placed upon the fact that they represented different types in temperament, disposition and attitudes.

Peter was at first impulsive—now on the hill top and full of enthusiasm—now in the valley—even ready to deny Christ. But the resurrection transformed him into a rock.

John, always named among the first four, was constant and loving.

Nathanael (Bartholomew) was full of faith, while Thomas was constitutionally a doubter.

"Empty Vessels."

Matthew was an official under the Roman government, while Simon, the Canaanite, was a zealot and in rebellion against the constituted authority. Jesus used even the practical talents of Judas, knowing, as He must have known, that in the end he would betray Him. One commentator asserts that there is nothing in the record to show that any one of the twelve was above the age of twenty-one when chosen.

There was not among the twelve a noted educator or a speaker of prominence—not one who could claim any superiority over the Master Himself or assume to advise Him as to the things to be taught. They were "empty vessels," ready and willing to be filled.

How different would have been His disciples if Jesus had had in mind the setting up of a temporal kingdom!

He would have needed men of political influence, men of executive ability, men of military experience, and men of persuasive speech.

But His kingdom was not of this world, and He called to His common people; they "heard him gladly" and, "leaving all, followed him."

Healing by Prayer.

It will be noticed that the authority which Christ first delegated to His apostles was over disease; it was "against unclean spirits, to cast them out, and to heal all manner of sickness and all manner of disease." In the eighth verse, the instructions were repeated: "Heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out devils: freely ye have received, freely give."

Whatever may be said today about healing by prayer, it cannot be denied or doubted that the power to heal was conferred upon the disciples by the Saviour and was exercised by them as it was by Christ Himself. And this power did not differ either in kind or in degree from the power exercised by the prophets of the Old Testament, or rather through them, for they only claimed to be the instruments through which God worked.

Of course, no one who believes in a Supreme Being will attempt to set limits to God's power or to deny that God can heal.

It matters not upon what ground the admission of power rests, although some qualify their admission until its value is very much impaired. The members of one group bring their views on this subject into harmony with their views on other subjects by defining a miracle as the result of higher laws unknown to us. On this theory, one may contend that we will some day understand Bible miracles that are not now understandable for lack of information.

Simple Mysteries.

The telegraph and the telephone for instance, were not understandable until man became acquainted with electricity. The radio is still scarcely understandable, although millions "listen in" and boys manufacture their own receivers. These things which seem simple enough when they were understood would have been very mysterious to the masses had only a few understood them.

But while future discoveries may explain by natural laws—higher laws now unknown—the miracles recorded in the Old and New Testament, it must be admitted that none of these miracles have in fact been explained by any discoveries made by man, either during the wonderful period of discovery through which the world has passed since the beginning of the last century or during any previous period of activity.

To say that they may be explained in the future is merely to say that all things are possible; but it is not unfair to insist that the failure to find explanations during a period so fruitful in scientific discoveries makes the future discovery of explanations of the miracles at least improbable.

God's Limitless Power.

It will not do, however, to say that the explanation suggested—namely, that they are accounted for by the operation of some higher law yet unknown—is the only one.

The power of God to make laws was not exhausted when He spoke into being the natural laws now known; neither can we question His power or His right to make special laws as well as general laws or to suspend any law at any time and for any length of time. And we cannot question God's ability to overcome by His omnipotent power any law that He has made, just as one overcomes the force of gravitation when he raises a weight, or as an insect overcomes the same law when it lifts a foot.

In other words, whenever we attempt to limit God's power by any rules that finite minds may suggest, we really deny to God the possession of infinite power.

Among those who accept the Christian God and believe him to be a real being, there can be but two disputed questions—not can God do any specified thing, but did God do it, or would God do it?

Evidence in the Case.

The first of these questions is settled by evidence.

If the Old Testament is true, God did through His prophets heal the sick and raise the dead.

If the New Testament is true, Christ also healed the sick and raised the dead and, as recorded in our text for today, He actually conferred upon His apostles the same power that He exercised Himself.

Those who dispute the veracity of the Bible record in those portions that describe the performance of miracles in the Old and New Testament do not advance proof to the contrary, for the simple reason that there is no opposing evidence. The assertion that they make is that God would not do the things described and, therefore, did not do them.

To attempt to declare without possibility of mistake what God would or would not do, assumes a knowledge of God's purposes and plans that few dare to claim.

If it is conceded that at any time in the past supernatural means of healing were actually employed, the burden of proof would seem to be on those who deny that such means can or would be employed today. Until the authority of the Bible can be overthrown, we must admit that there was healing by prayer; should we not be open minded enough to examine into the merits of the evidence offered in support of the propopsition that such healing is done today?

Christ's Mission.

"These twelve Jesus sent forth, and commanded them, saying, Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not: but go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel."

Christ's mission was first to the Jews. His apostles were chosen from the Jews and here they were specifically warned against making any appeal to the Gentiles or Samaritans. Later, Peter was instructed in a vision to preach to the Gentiles and Paul was made "a chosen vessel' to bear the Saviour's name to the Gentiles.

In the issuing of the commission set forth in our text, preaching was secondary. Healing came first and was described with great detail. "And as ye go, preach, saying, "The Kingdom of Heaven is at hand."

The miracles established the authority of Christ and of His followers; those who were convinced by manifestations of His supernatural power listened to His preaching.

The world is now being won for Christ by preaching, but that preaching rests upon the Word of God, the only authority of the church, and that is our sufficient authority for the church's belief in a wonder-working God and in a supernatural Christ.

Things New and Old About the Bible

Some Books Wise and Otherwise

By Rev. W. P. KING, Pastor
First Methodist Church, Gainesville, Ga.

George H. Doran company has published the fourth and fifth in the series of Fundamentalist-Modernist Debates. The two volumes deal with "The Deity of Jesus," and "The Virgin Birth." These books contain the only official text of the fourth and fifth of a series of five theological debates between Rev. Charles Francis Potter and Dr. John Roach Straton, to be published under the following titles:

I. The Battle Over the Bible.

II. Evolution versus Creation.

III. The Virgin Birth—Fact or Fiction?

IV. Was Christ Both God and Man?

V. Utopia—By Man's Effort or Christ's Return?

There are many statements in these volumes that will not appeal to a large part of Christendom. Since these two debaters represent the two extremes of a rigid literalism and a liberal unitarianism.

Another volume by the George H. Doran Company is "Looking Unto Jesus," by T. Marshall Morsey.

The author has written a most assuring book on the world's need of Christ Himself—not confusin theological arguments about Him. It is written at the request of the many whom Dean Morsey had led out of doubt to strong assuring faith in Christ. Dean Morsey's approach to the whole question is peculiarly clear and convincing, and has evoked clear expressions of gratitude.

A university woman with degrees in Europe and America recently said: "If I had only met you twenty years sooner, I would have saved myself twenty years of wandering religiously."

"The Christ of the Bible," by Dr. R. A. Torrey is published by the George H. Doran Company. A large part of this volume gives a statement concerning the divine personality of Jesus Christ that most Christians are in accord with. There is a statement of fundamentals that only the small minority in the Christian church call in question. Always the objection to Dr. Torrey is the inevitable and invariable introduction of literalistic and fundamentalist views and interpretations. His interpretation of Old Testament prophecies are fanciful and is not supported by present day Biblical scholarship.

According to Dr. Torrey by the death of Christ "God's Wrath at the Sinner Is Appeased." According to Jesus, by his death, the Holy love of God for the sinner is revealed. A discussion of the ideas of this volume concerning the Second Advent and the thousand years physical reign of Christ and the endless vagaries of the author would require too much space.

Atrocities of Kaiser.

What does the gentle reader think of these words of Dr. Torrey: "The appalling atrocities of the kaiser, and his hordes in Belgium, in the most awful days of the last war, will be nothing to what shall come upon this earth when the devil's own kaiser takes the reigns of government."

The MacMillan Company announce: "Snowden's Nine Months Course in the Life of Christ," "A Guide to Religious Pageantry" by Mason Crum, and "What Education Has the Most Worth?" by Charles Franklin Thwing.

The book of Dr. Snowden deals with the Sunday school lessons for the remainder of the present year and the first three months of 1925.

This Ninth Month's Course in the Life of Jesus, containing nearly three hundred printed pages, is admirably adapted for the use of classes of seniors and adult groups which meet at the regular Sunday school hour. If the attempt is made by such classes and groups to get along without any class book to provide sufficient grist for discussion, the main burden of the talking falls upon the leader, and listening to a lecture or a monologue constitutes about all that goes on in the weekly sessions.

The Prayer Meeting.

There is no question but that general participation on the part of the members make the most successful attendance building program that has ever been devised. A copy of this course in each member's hands will bring him to the meeting of the class so chock full of ideas and questions that you could not keep him quiet.

The same thing is true of the prayer meeting. If it is only a "third preaching service," it is a tax that none but a Spurgeon or a Joseph Parker can meet. A powerful devotional undercurrent runs through all that Dr. Snowden writes. Provide those who attend a copy of this course in the Life of Jesus and your prayer meeting problem is solved for nine months.

"The Guide to Religious Pageantry" gives a statement of a simple method for presenting vividly to an audience the chief historical incidents and lessons of the Bible. There is no question but that this method of appeal to the eye-gate will fix the Biblical incidents in the mind in a way that is beyond the reach of a mere abstract treatment. This method is especially helpful to children and young people. All abstractions, whether logical or theological, are without the pale of the experience of childhood. The child's mind deals with the concrete. The child knows and learns religion in personality, in action. This book is not a technical treatment of the subject, but an introduction or primer, purposely made simply and elementary to meet the needs of completely inexperienced religious workers in the churches in pageantry work.

The Descriptive List of Approved Plays and Pageantry is by no means an appended section to the chapters preceding but rather the chapters are appended to the list, as the latter was gathered first, and the directions and counsel added to serve as a general guide to successful presentation.

On Spencer's Essay.

"What Education Has the Most Worth?" is one of the masterpieces on our educational problems. The very title of this volume carries the reader back two generations to Herbert Spencer's famous essay. Dr. Thwing has not attempted to write an answer to that essay, but he does make a certain application or extension of Spencer's principles. He takes up the contents, methods, forces, limitations, conditions, and results of our whole educational process. He also includes a consideration of the educational value of many modern movements, such as the "project" method and the moving picture.

Chapter I has to do with the individual. Concerning the body, the author gives the following five forces as necessary to its development—food, exercise, sleep, clothes and fresh air. Concerning the mind, the author holds the two elements which are of peculiar worth are—interestingness and usefulness. The author makes a summary of the different types of mind which are highly suggestive, but which cannot be elaborated upon. These types are: the interrogative, the intuitive, the logical, the reflective, the acquisitive, the interpretatives, the sympathetic, the appreciative, the experiencing, the constructive, and the progressive. Some of these types shade into each other and partially overlap, but the education which has most worth will be concerned with each of these several types of mind.

In the third place man has a heart as well as a body and mind. The heart stands for that complex called feelings or emotions, and includes love, hate, trust, fear, complacency, anger, satisfaction, disgust, wonder, indifference, courage, timidity, commendation, reproach, satisfaction, jealousy, reward, revenge, reverence, contempt, purity, baseness, joy, sorrow, desire, aversion, humility, pride, hope and despair.

Will of Individual.

The fourth possession of the individual is the will and the volitions result in habits, character, and destiny. There is also the faculty of conscience which is concerned with right and wrong and qualities of acts and processes.

Under the sense of beauty, the author places music as the fundamental element. The seventh and last characteristic of the individual is the sense of religion. The fundamental element and the controlling force in religion is the doctrine of God. Religion is the relation which man holds to such a being. To seek to eliminate this relation from any scheme of education is essentially folly.

There are six other chapters in the book which deal with education in its application to the community; content; forces; methods and conditions; education passive, negative, part-time; results.

There has come under my observation, no more stimulating study of education than this volume by Dr. Thwing. It will prove of special interest to preachers and educators.

MUSICAL BUREAU SEAT SALE OPENS FOR WINTER SERIES

"What musical attraction of the coming season is attracting most attention?" someone asked Russell Bridges Saturday. Mr. Bridges, as president of the Southern Musical bureau, is expected to know all these little things.

"Paul Whiteman and his jazz orchestra," replied Mr. Bridges, without hesitation. "We're going to have some fine singers and pianists and violinists and even a complete grand opera performance on New Year's eve. But the people who mention concerts to me talk about Whiteman. They want to know if Paul is coming himself, with his own 'regular' orchestra. And when I assure them that the contract calls for the genuine thing, they go away satisfied.

"That doesn't mean that Atlanta is getting 'lowbrow.' It means simply that almost everybody, from the lovers of Brahms to the devotees of Irving Berlin are interested in what Paul Whiteman has done and is doing to develop real American music. And I believe that when Paul Whitman comes to the auditorium on January 15 there will not be a vacant seat."

Paul Whiteman and his orchestra represent only one of the five attractions on Mr. Bridges' list for the coming season, for which the ticket sale opens Monday at Phillips & Crew's music store.

A notable event will be the first grand opera at popular prices in years—"Madame Butterfly," to be given by the San Carlo Opera company, with Tamaki Miura, the Japanese soprano, in the title role. This is to be in complete form—cast, chorus, orchestra stage settings—just as the Metropolitan presents it.

Vladimir de Pachmann, the veteran Russian pianist, whose eccentricities are matched only by his marvelous playing, is to open the artists' series of concerts on November 14. Ruth St. Denis, Ted Shawn and the Denishawn dancers appear on January 29, and Mischa Elman, the famous violinist, closes the season on March 3.

Concert patrons may obtain choice seats this week at prices $5, $7.50 and $10, plus tax.

ZINC AND COPPER BANISH RHEUMATISM

Remarkable New Discovery Proving Boon to Thousands.

Memphis, Tenn.—Application for patent covering what is considered to be the most unique discovery of its kind has just been made by the Eureka Manufacturing Co., Dept. D. A., 253 Jefferson Ave., Memphis, Tenn. After years of experiment they discovered that an especially constructed, chemically treated set of heel plates, one zinc and one copper, placed in the shoes of the sufferer will, by a scientific process, quickly rid the wearer of rheumatic pain, sciatica and stiff joints, as well as tone up the system in general. Experiments in hundreds of cases have proved this discovery to be a boon to all sufferers of the above ailments, especially as it eliminates the use of medicine, which, in many instances, proves to be of only temporary value. They are anxious to prove their statements by sending any sufferer of rheumatism a special liberal trial offer. Write them today.—(adv.)

Library Literary Notes

Some Recent Books on the Drama.

BY LUCILE COBB, of the Carnegie Library

"The Youngest Drama," by Ashley Dukes.

"The Drama in Europe in Theory and Practice," by Eleanor Frances Jourdain.

"Tendencies of Modern English Drama," by A. E. Morgan.

"An Introduction to Dramatic Theory," by Allardyce Nicoll.

Mr. Dukes' book is a study of 50 dramatists. They are divided into five groups—forerunners, realists, comedians, expressionists and poets and historians. Ludwig Lewisohn writes of the book: "These studies of Mr. Dukes are fragmentary. They are evidently passages lifted from the reviews of single plays. They contain many sentences very keen-edged in meaning and felicitous in phrasing but not likely to convey much to one who has not a fairly intimate acquaintance with the subject under discussion. What is remarkable about Mr. Dukes' little book is the fine catholicity of his appreciation."

Another critic writes: "Mr. Dukes is a welcome explorer, gifted with indispensable faith in there being always something worth discovering just over the next ridge of hills. And this is all to the good. With courage, but no very highly-developed sense of direction, he has found his way hurriedly across the well-mapped lands of Becque and Ibsen and Galsworthy, plunged into several of the most outlandish territories of the modern continental drama, rapidly acquired a general idea of what their habitants are up to, and, jotting down contours of the more conspicuous peaks and watersheds, has emerged with an entertaining and provocative survey of the whole terrain."

Miss Jourdain's Book.

Miss Jourdain, as the title page of her book tells us, is a doctor of the University of Paris, principal of St. Hugh's college, Oxford, some time Taylorian lecturer in the University of Oxford. In her preface Miss Jourdain says that the object of the book is to be an aid to literary history and appreciation. "There are two directions in which dramatic art may possibly move," she writes. "Representations may become more definitely romantic in character, with the intention of amusing or pleasing an audience already used to the cinema. This would make for rapid changes of scenery, variety in the plot, and little character-drawing. On the other hand, plays may be written to appeal to a literary and cultivated audience, such as that which attends a repertory theater. In such cases the difficulties of financing the plays will lead to economy in the presentation and simplification of scenery: the interest being focused by good actors on plot and character development."

"There are happy signs which indicate that the direction of the English drama today is towards poetry," writes Professor Morgan in his book, "Tendencies of Modern English Drama." "The form may be verse or prose, but the spirit is poetic. It is not to be expected, or hoped, that kinds will be limited. The old genres will doubtless continue, but new paths of development are being opened out. The more the better. The drama should meet the needs of all and therefore it should be catholic and draw sustenance from every side of life. Great hope lies in the work of men who in opening out new sources of inspiration are dominated by the poetic impulse. With some, like Lord Dunsany, the imagination may crave for the rich stimulus of the brilliant east; some, like Mr. Bottomley, will turn to the simplicity of a primitive past; others, like Synge, Mr. Masefield and Mr. Abercrombie, will find all they need in the lives of the folk. They may write in prose or they may write in verse. But one and all they demand free scope for the imagination and they are all primarily concerned with displaying the human heart. In a word they are poets. If our drama is restored to its old place in the realm of poetry we need have no fears that it will decay, for 'Poetry is as immortal as the heart of man.'"

An English critic objects to Professor Morgan's belief that the drama is moving towards poetry. "This is an ambiguous and provoking statement," writes the critic, "and it is to be assumed that by poetic in spirit he means tragic. The entire future of the drama rests on its capacity for tragedy. The theater may well become a more powerful instrument of social idealism than it is today, but it is difficult to imagine it turned towards tragedy. The tragic play is not popular; its occasional success is not due to its poetic worth. Tragedy needs a religious faith on which to build; it demands a community whose idealism is expressed in moral and mystical principles rather than in economic formulas. It is a familiar paradox that when a nation is healthy and great it delights in tragedy, and that when it is decadent and oppressed it can produce only comedy. In modern times a distracted, overwrought people demands entertainment; it lacks the enthusiasm and deep belief which alone can support tragic drama."

Comment on Morgan.

J. Ranken Towse writes of Professor Morgan's book: "This is one of the ablest and most interesting studies of the characteristics of the best modern English drama that has been published in many years. Mr. Morgan, even if it is possible to dissent from parts of his philosophy and some of his estimates, writes with the precision and authority of a man thoroughly conversant with his subject, of keen judgment and cultivated taste and a rare gift of sanely critical comparison. And his style is delightfully compact, lucid and fluent. . .As a competent and often brilliant appraisal of the respective merits of the principal works of the leading dramatists of the last two generations this is a book which no student of the modern theater can afford to neglect."

The book contains a very useful list of about 600 plays, together with the dates of publication or production.

Allardyce Nicoll, the author of "An Introduction to Dramatic Theory," is a lecturer in English language and literature in King's college, University of London. His book is divided into three parts, tragedy and comedy, tragedy, comedy. He has treated the dramatic productivity of Greece, Rome, France, Italy, Germany and England as one, in an attempt to capture those essential characteristics by which all are linked together.

Agricultural Education For The Masses

THE Southeastern Fair, the premier agricultural exhibition of the south, opens next Saturday, October 4th, and will continue through October 11th.

The South, notwithstanding its wonderful industrial expansion, is still largely dependent upon the development of its agricultural possibilities. Through the organization of the boys and girls into clubs competing for valuable prizes for the best hog, the best corn, the best canned fruit and other things the Southeastern Fair is teaching the citizens of tomorrow that it costs no more in time or money to raise the best than it did to produce the razor-back hog and nubbins that were typical of the one-crop era.

The Atlanta and Lowry National Bank has long been convinced that improved agricultural conditions would bring to the South a permanent, dependable prosperity, and that the present revival of business has been brought about by the prospects for good crops at fair prices. We believe that the Southeastern Fair is helping to bring about this condition and that it is entitled to the full support and encouragement of the business men, not only of Atlanta, but of the state and section.

Photoplay News

CONDUCTED by LORENZO JONES JR.

'The Sea Hawk' Big Production At Metropolitan

Sixteenth Century Sea Life With Milton Sills as Star.

Heralded as the greatest sea drama ever filmed, Frank Lloyd's production of "The Sea Hawk," a First National picture version of the popular novel by Rafael Sabatini.

Filmed for the most part on the sea on four ships of Sixteenth Century design, rowed by hundreds of galley slaves, and replete with stirring action and sacrifice and romance, "The Sea Hawk," like Mr. Lloyd's first independent production, "Black Oxen," is said to be a decided innovation in photoplays.

Milton Sills is seen as Sir Oliver Tressilian, later Sakr-el-Bahr, commander of Algerian pirates and called "the hawk of the sea." Enid Bennett, who will long be remembered for her dainty Maid Mariam in "Robin Hood," essays the part of Rosamund Godolphin, Sir Oliver's finance. Lloyd Hughes, playing his first character role, assumes the character of Lionel, Sir Oliver's brother, and Wallace MacDonald plays Master Peter, Rosamund's brother.

Marc MacDermott, recently seen in "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall," plays Sir John Killigrew, guardian to Rosamund and Peter, and Wallace Beery is said to give a decided touch of realism to the pirate Jasper Leigh. Frank Currier plays Asad-ed-Din, the agedaged basha of Algiers, and others in the large cast are Kathleen Key, Mme. Medea Radzina, late of the Moscow Art theater; Christine Montt, daughter of the Chilean president; Fred de Silva, Hector V. Sarno, Albert Prisco, Claire du Brey, Lionel Belmore, Henry Barrows, Kate Price and Louis Morrison.

Four ancient ships of gigantic dimensions, requiring from 100 to 450 men to sail them, and costing over $275,000, an entire Algerian city with its slave markets, quaint streets and elaborately draped courts, English castles and massive old English interior sets were built that "The Sea Hawk" might have a proper background. More than $85,000 worth of costumes were necessary for the many members of the cast, but its producers say that even these extraordinary sets and gorgeous clothes are but incidentals in the true brilliance of the photoplay.

Unlike most big photoplays, "The Sea Hawk" does not wait until its final sequences to display its bigness of setting and action.

An original music score has been assembled and synchronized by Enrico Leide for this presentation of "The Sea Hawk;" and it represents a most serious effort in reproducing, in detail, the atmosphere and the locale of the century in which the story evolves. "Buddha" a haunting melody by Pollack will follow Milton Sills during his peregrination in the east and old English songs will create the proper musical background for the initial chapter. The "Triumphal March" from Aida will open the De Luxe performances, led by Mr. Leide.

'FEET OF CLAY' PLAY THE HOWARD THEATER

Vera Reynolds, the New Flapper, Is Co-Starred With Rad LaRoche.

In his latest production, Cecil B. DeMille, of the alluring flavored cinema concoctions, has reached in all directions to make "Feet of Clay," which opens at the Howard next week, strictly at 1924 picture. The heroine played by the new "find," Vera Reynolds, is the new type to whom the public interest has turned, the flapper, grown from parties and petting at seventeen to marriage and responsibilities at twenty-one. Of course there is a wonderful DeMille party, a dance floor laid over a pool with interesting connecting bridges. All of this is preceded by a colorful beach sequence, utilizing a myriad of striking novelties, and featuring an exciting race between girls on surf boards behind fast speedboats. Mix in a struggling couple in a Harlem flat, a mid-ocean fight between a swimmer and a shark, and it may readily be seen that DeMille is back again in his old form. Timeliness and novelty, according to a careful census of the greatest film successes of the past ten years, seem to be the two most infallible ingredients of a photoplay that will please the theater-going public. "Feet of Clay" is timely and has novelty to spare. Draw your own conclusions! Featured in the principal roles of "Feet of Clay" are, besides Miss Reynolds: Rod La Rocque Victor Varconi, Ricado Cortez, Julia Faye, Theodore Kosloff and Robert Edeson. With the exception of "The Ten Commandments," "Feet of Clay" is by far DeMille's best production to date—and one of the biggest pictures seen at the Howard for quite some time. Many novelties also will be presented, including "The Mysteries of Mah Jongg," here is a two-reel novelty that will show those interested in this fascinating game, as well as those who have knowledge of the game, the perplexing and correct way to play "Mah Jong." One by looking at this novelty only once will be able to go straight home and play the game, so plainly is it placed upon the screen before you.

A selected series of movements from popular standard overtures will be presented this week by Conductor Risinger and his Howard Symphony orchestra under the title of "Overturiana." This special arrangement has been compiled from the best-known parts from Gomez' "Il Guarany," Offenbach's "Orpheus," Suppe's "Poet and Peasant," Herold's "Zampa," Thomas' "Mignon and" Rosini's "William Tell."

The musical setting for the feature "Feet of Clay' has been scored around two themes from Kalman's "Yankee Princess," the first "Roses, Lovely Roses" and the second "The Waltz Is Made for Love."

BETTY COMPSON IN 'THE FEMALE' AT THE RIALTO

A Story of Primitive Love and Savage Hate.

A story of the African veldt with its hidden dangers, volcanic hates and cyclonic loves is "The Female," starring Betty Compson as Dalla, the lion cub, which will surmount the program at the Rialto theater this week.

It is regarded as Miss Compson's greatest role—that of the primitive woman from the brood of the lioness to the dazzling society woman, conquering the loves of men for the mere pleasure of the thrill. It was Kipling who said "the female of the species is more deadly than the male," and every day brings fresh evidence that he was right. It remained for Cynthia Stockley to prove that not only is the female more dangerous than the male, but she is more ferocious than the king of beasts.

"The Female" is the story of primitive love and savage hate—of an uncultured madcap Boer girl who exercises a strange fascination over the men she meets. Many men try to conquer her only to learn that she has been well named "the lion cub." The man she loves looks upon her as an ignorant little savage. What she does when she finally realizes the gulf that lies between them furnishes some of the most thrilling drama ever flashed upon the screen.

Heading the strong supporting cast for Miss Compson in "The Female" are Warner Baxter and Noah Beery. Dorothy Cumming, Helen Butler, Pauline French, Edgar Norton and Florence Wix also have important roles in the play as adapted from Miss Stockley's novel, which was read all over the world in the Cosmopolitan magazine.

There are other featured players who get no credit in the press notices but they don't care.

They are an assortment of lions, fourteen in number, ranging in size from tiny cubs to grown-ups. All the zoos in southern California were scoured by Director Sam Wood to find African lions of just the right size and temperament.

Corinne Griffith.

(At the Palace.)

Conway Tearle, who is cofeatured with Corinne Griffith in the First National production, "Lilies of the Field," which is scheduled to begin a two-day engagement at the Palace theater on Monday is on record to the effect that the role of Louis Willing, which he essays in this picture, is the finest ever assigned to him.

ADOLPH MENJOU STAR IN LOEW'S PHOTOPLAY

Heralded as the best picture yet of the jazz series, "Sinners in Silk," a Hobart Henley production, comes to Loew's Grand theater tomorrow for a run of six days. It tells not only of youthful revellers growing older, but of elderly revellers growing younger, and is said to contain some of the peppiest and most interesting scenes yet made of life in the younger smart set.

The elderly group which enters the life of today is represented in the picture by Adolphe Menjou, who plays the role of a gentleman of uncertain years who takes the Steinach rejuvenation treatment and jumps with a bang into the high-powered activities of younger society. Menjou, who has become a firm favorite in parts where he appears as a blase, cynical, and yet humorous individual, is said to be more blase, cynical, and humorous than ever before in this production.

Eleanor Boardman, star of "Souls for Sale" and other late pictures, is the girl in the case—a typical flapper of the present day. She is most charming in the scene where she is overcome by the cleverness of Menjou's sleek wooing.

Conrad Nagel, who recently played the role of Angel Claire in "Tess of the D'Urbervilles," has an entirely different sort of part in "Sinners in Silk." He is the youth who loves the flirtatious Eleanor, and finally wins out over the older man.

This picture, the newest of the jazz series, is new in more ways than one. It offers a highly original idea in Menjou and the Steinach rejuvenation treatment. With this as a premise, it was natural that Mr. Henley was able to develop a number of highly amusing and thrilling situations, which he did with the fullest degree. One of the features of this picture is a bevy of beautiful girls who appear as the different types of New York's smart set. Some of these players are Miss du Pont, Virginia Lee Corbin, Dorothy Dwan, Ann Luther, Peggy Elinor, Eugenie Gilbert, Mary Aiken and Estelle Clark.

WEST POINT CADETS ACT WITH BARTHELMESS

The United States Military academy paid an unusual honor to Richard Barthelmess and his director, John Robertson, when the authorities granted leave to thirty cadets in order that they might come to New York and participate in a scene for "Classmates."

Most of the academy scenes were staged at West Point but, in order to get the proper lighting effects, Mr. Robertson had to stage the big dance scene in the New York studio. As it would have been impossible to engage actors to look like West Point cadets or to behave in the correct military fashion, he was obliged to ask permission to use real cadets.

The "hop" was a treat to the cadet actors. Most of them invited their "hop" girls to join them and the scene at the studio had all the appearance of a real West Point dance.

Howard To Offer Singing And Talking Pictures

At last the perfect combination of the moving picture and sound reproduction has arrived, according to advance notices of a new installation which will be demonstrated at the Howard theater soon. The talking, singing pictures will be shown here all week at each regular performance.

The method of coordinating the sound waves with the pictures is illustrated above. It is known as the "Deforest phonofilm reproducing." The picture is projected in the usual manner on the screen. The audible accompaniment, whether it be speech, song or music, is recorded at the place of original recording by light passing through the positive film. This light, in projection, falls upon the photo-electric cell which converts the light into sound waves. These sound waves, amplified by the audion and then by means of telephone wires conveyed from the projection room in the rear of the theater to a position back of the motion picture screen, where they are attached to loud speaker horns, which make them resound through the theater.

STAGE DANCING

Miss Sullivan To Take Charge of Classes.

Miss Nellie Sullivan, popular Atlanta dancer and instructor of dancing, has been engaged to take charge of the new and fully equipped department of stage dancing of the Atlanta School of Stage Arts.

This became known Saturday through the announcement of Stuart Beebe, managing director of the school. The school is featuring a specially designed combination course of dramatic art and stage dancing, and Miss Sullivan's connection with the department will be hailed with considerable interest by many Atlantans because of her recognized ability and success.

Ten years' experience as a teacher of dancing in Atlanta has equipped Miss Sullivan splendidly for the task of taking over the department. She has appeared in prologues many times at the Howard, Metropolitan and Lyric theaters.

Miss Sullivan was a pupil of the Alviene School of Dancing in New York and has just recently returned from Chicago, after studying under the best ballet masters in that city.

The new department of the school has equipment such as is used in the best schools in New York.

It is the aim of Mr. Beebe to offer his pupils every advantage of equipment possible in their histrionic education. Many of his pupils already have advanced to a proficient stage, two of them appearing in "Secrets" at the Lyric theater this week.

They are Misses Elizabeth Stallings and Maureen Beall.

BIG COMEDY FEATURE IS LOEW'S HEADLINER

Mark Adams and Big Cast in "The Barber of Seville."

"The Barber of Seville," a comedy offering with Mark Adams and a sterling cast of artists, is the feature attraction at Loew's Grand theater this week, being another of the big-time acts that have headlined the bills at the local house recently. Ben Kubens is with "The Barber of Devils," as are Burns and Kisser, as clever a pair of artists as can be found on the vaudeville stage today.

Four men and three women are the strength of the cast with every one of the seven in a starring part. The setting is a familiar barbershop scene, while comedy and songs run throughout the entire offering. It is one of those acts that are rare on the vaudeville stage and is the very highest class offerings, ranking with the featuring offerings that have played the Loew's house here since the inauguration of the full-week policy a few months ago.

You will laugh until it hurts at the antics of the various comedians in this act, while the song numbers will prove an additional treat to those who like good singing combined with a wholesome brand of comedy. "The Barber of Seville" is one of the best comedy vaudeville offerings on the circuits, a vaudeville act you don't want to miss.

Jack Ryan and Bee O'Neil in "Capering Cunningly With Cute Cutups" offer a selection of songs and dances so arranged as to make one of the liveliest and most enjoyable of vaudeville offerings. Jack Ryan and Bee O'Neil are well known to vaudeville lovers, and their coming to Atlanta this week at Loew's Grand will be welcomed.

Mildred Rogers and Jack Dorkin in "Dance Items" offer some of the very latest, cleverest and snappy dance hits. They stage also a revue of the dances of the season, and are really clever terpsichorean artists.

Joe Burns and Murray Kisser, in "Stromberry Pie," have a most eccentric act, as these two comedians are of the extremely eccentric variety. They do some comedy and song stuff that is sure to score a big hit in Atlanta.

Franchini Brothers "Supreme Athletes" will be seen in hand-to-hand balancing that will prove a great treat to those who like good acrobatics.

Adolphe Menjou, the popular screen actor, is the star in the feature Goldwyn production, "Sinner in Silk."

"SECRETS," ROMANCE AT LYRIC THEATER

Miss King and Lytell Featured in Glorification of Loyal Love.

"Secrets," the magnificent love drama by May Edginton, is to be produced all this week at the Lyric theater, beginning with ladies' bargain performance Monday night.

It is the same spectacular story of life and love, of a loyal wife's struggle to save her husband first from other men and then from other women, that thrilled Atlantans when Norma Talmadge played the featured role in the First National motion picture adaptation of the original speaking stage version.

"Secrets" is to give Miss Edith King, in the Talmadge role, the most varied acting assignment she has ever filled in Atlanta, one which demands expression of the countless emotions and reactions of four different periods in a woman's life—in youth, in young married experience, in middle age and in old age.

Lytell in O'Brien Role.

Wilfred Lytell, as the husband and lover, has a similarly varied role, the equal of anything he has done in Atlanta. Eugene O'Brien had it in the screen version.

"Secrets," presenting its characters at four different stages of their lives, should not in any way be confused with "Mary the Third," in which the principal players appeared in prologues suggestive of previous generations.

In "Secrets" Miss King and Lytell are Mary and John Carlton from the beginning to the end of the play. In the first act they are young lovers, Mary a nobleman's daughter, John a clerk. A clandestine love affair is exposed, forbidden by the girl's father and the two elope to the western wilderness of America.

The struggle of pioneer life makes an intensely dramatic second episode for the play. Cattle thieves attack their log cabin to revenge themselves upon John. Mary, newly a mother, seizes a rifle to fight by his side. She is the fighting wife and mother, saving her man but losing her baby.

Mary Battles Infidelity.

Success sends them back, in maturity, to surroundings of luxury, where Mary rears her family of growing boys and girls. John, attractive to all women, finds himself attracted to others than his wife. Her fight now is to save him from disgrace and to save her children from knowledge of their father's infidelity. The act is a sex and social problem play concentrated into one act of intense dramatic interest.

The play passes on into the final period of the lives of John and Mary and the loyal wife again is fighting for her husband, this time against death that is creeping upon him in his old age. Before the curtain falls she has won the fight, for the time at least, and the play ends in the sweetest climax of modern drama.

Atlantans have seen Miss King and Mr. Lytell in youthful roles. They have never seen Miss King as a mother, never as a woman in the full flower of maturity, never with the silver crown of age, nor Lytell as the mate for any of those types. "Secrets" offers a new opportunity to enjoy the Lyric's Broadway stars in a new way.

New Faces in Cast.

It has been necessary to include several popular Atlanta amateur players in the big cast of characters, which includes every member of the regular company. Oralee Shelton, Laura Harrison, already Lyric favorites; Mary Barnes and Cyril Lawyer have the supplementary parts.

William Macauley, Will Loyd, Rankin Mansfield, Gavin Harris, Director Edwin Vail, Finley Freeman, Miss Loraine Bernard, Miss Marion White and Miss Ramona Weaver have the principal supporting roles.

The players are to be attired in costumes of four periods of the last half century—in the fashionable garb of 1860, in the attire of the pioneers of a few years later, in the fashionable apparel of the mid-Victorian period and in the prevailing modes of the day. Furniture and stage furnishings are to be in keeping with the periods represented.

The success of "Secrets" in New York and on tour in its original stage version and the later success of its story on the silver screen recommend it to Atlantans as excellent entertainment. It may be seen any night this week or at Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday matinee performances.

AT THE Theatres

'COSMOPOLITAN TRIO' HEADS KEITH'S BILL

A real treat for music lovers will be offered at Keith's Forsyth theater the first three days of this week in the act of the "Cosmopolitan Trio," former opera singers, who will headline the excellent program in a few moments of harmonious melodies.

The trio is composed of Beth McCoy, Pompeii Tomasini and Fernando Quarneri, famous concert artists, known all over the world for their sterling voices. They have been heard in opera, too, and their recent coming to the vaudeville stage has added another big feature to the already long list of Keith stars.

Mr. Tomasini is a tenor of excellent qualities, while Miss Beth McCoy is the soprano with a rich, pure voice. Mr. Quarneri is a remarkable baritone. The blend of these three voices makes really a distinct musical hit.

The Forsyth will present this offering and four other good acts the first part of the week in its new winter frock, so to speak, Manager Semon having redecorated the interior with new carpets throughout, magnificent draperies and touches here and there that add refined beauty to interior of the popular theater.

Another splendid act on the program will be that of Jack Conway and company in a farce skit, entitled "In the Cellar." A rather too lengthy visit to the cellar produces a stage of comic inebriation and at this sort of thing Mr. Conway is at his best.

King and Beatty offer an unusual collection of songs with a wealth of clean, wholesome fun, in "Artistic Apple Sauce." Jack King was formerly of Steppe, Mahlinger and King, the well-known trio who were foremost in their particular brand of entertainment for many years. George Beatty was formerly baritone and comedian of the famous Big City Four, leading vaudeville quartet.

The proper degree of anger may always be depended upon for good comedy situations. Dan Creedon and Viola Davis have a comedy skit called "I Could Smash You," which has to do with various stages of turbulent tempers. Of course, it is a skit, and like all good skits it does not stick exactly to form or theme, but rambles along with song and dialogue.

If there is a thrill in your system the Chandon Trio will bring it out. Here are three aerialists, two men and a woman, who perform really remarkable and truly sensational program of gymnastics. They are called aerialists supreme and are justly entitled to the billing.

A Pathe news-reel and a Felix Cat comedy complete the program.

The Atlanta Constitution's ELEPHANT PUZZLE CONTEST

$1,000.00 GRAND PRIZE

ALL PRIZES CASH

The Problem:

What Is the Sum Total of the Figures Forming the Elephant?

Include the figures in the ground-work under the Elephant.

Simply Add them Up to Get the Solution

There are no marks, lines or characters in the elephant except figures. These figures range from 2 to 9, each standing alone. There are no "ones" or "ciphers." There are no groups of figures such as "23" or "42." The heads of the "6's" are distinctly curved while the tails of the "9's" are straight, or practically so. There is no trick or illusion of any description in the chart.

General Rules of The Contest

1. Only bona fide residents of Georgia and adjoining states, meaning Alabama, Florida, North and South Carolina and Tennessee, may take part in this contest.

2. Contestants may submit as many different solutions as they desire, provided payment of one of the three amounts designated in the prize list shall accompany each solution. NO SOLUTION NOT ACCOMPANIED BY A SUBSCRIPTION PAYMENT WILL BE REGISTERED.

3. Only one prize will be paid to any person, household, or group of persons working together. When, in the judgment of the contest manager, two or more solutions have been copied or worked in colusion, such solutions may be rejected by him and the subscription money refunded.

4. The Atlanta Constitution is to decide any questions which may arise that are not covered by the published rules, and those entering this contest agree to abide by such decisions and accept them as final and conclusive.

5. All solutions must be mailed or delivered to The Atlanta Constitution office on or before 9 o'clock, Saturday, November 8th, 1924. Solutions sent by mail bearing postmark of that date will be accepted, if rules governing same are complied with.

6. This contest extends from Sunday, September 28th, to and including Saturday, November 8th, 1924.

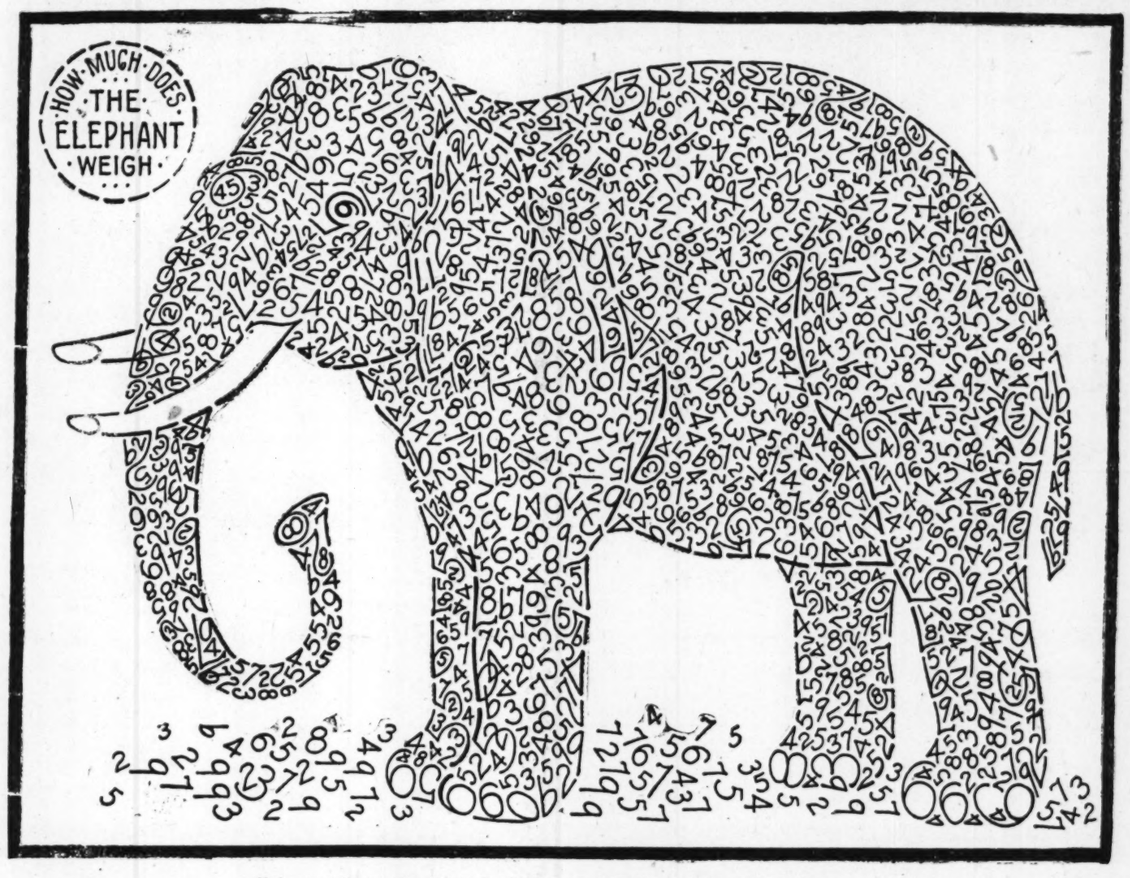

7. In case of ties, as many prizes will be reserved as there are people tied before any prizes are awarded for less correct solutions, and another puzzle will be submitted to those tied. That is, if two or more people should tie on the best solution, the first two or more prizes will be reserved for them, and they will be awarded in the order of the standing of their solutions of the second puzzle. If ties still result, as many as four tie-breaking puzzles will be used, after which should ties still result each contestant will receive the full value of the prize tied for.

8. The regular daily and Sunday subscription rates apply in this contest, viz: $9.50 for twelve months, $5.00 for six months, or $2.50 for three months. Full amount should be remitted in every instance. If subscriptions are sent through subscription agent, no commission can be deducted.

9. Subscriptions may be new or renewals. Both count the same. A new subscription is an order from a person who is not now taking The Daily and Sunday Constitution. A renewal is a payment made by a person who is now taking the daily and Sunday Constitution, either from the carrier, agent or direct by mail.

10. A person who is now taking the daily and Sunday Constitution, and paying a carrier or agent by the week or month, may send or bring direct to The Constitution a three, six or twelve months' payment with the solution. Whatever is due such carrier, dealer or agent, must be paid to him, as the remittance sent us will date from the day it is received. The carrier or agent will be notified by The Constitution of such advance payment. Renewals on mail subscriptions will be extended for the length of time paid for from present paid date of expiration.

EXTRA!

Name the Elephant and Win an Extra Prize

The Constitution wants two good and appropriate names for its pachyderm. It therefore offers two extra prizes for these names, which may be submitted whether or not those submitting them send a solution on the weight of the elephant or not. NO SUBSCRIPTION HAS TO BE PAID BY THOSE SUBMITTING NAMES. This offer open and free to everybody.

FIRST PRIZE, for the best name $50

SECOND PRIZE, for the next best name $25

Each name may consist of from one to three words, but no one may submit more than one name, or use more than three words in any name he or she submits. No name may be submitted later than October 30. The best names will be determined by judges whom The Constitution will select to decide the question.

In case two people submit the same name, and it is selected as one that wins a prize, each of those submitting that name will receive the full value of that respective prize. Now, here's a chance to exercise your wits in selecting an appropriate name for The Constitution's Elephant. Just write it down plainly with your name and address included and send it in for consideration.

Elephant Name Coupon

TO THE ATLANTA CONSTITUTION:

I submit as an appropriate name for your Elephant the following:

.....

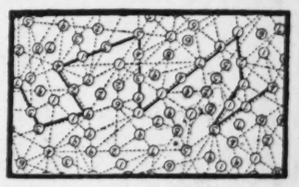

Name .....

Address .....

NOTE: While the contest for solving the elephant's weight does not close until November 8, the last date on which you may submit a name is October 30.

Names may be submitted on a slip of paper or on this coupon.

Deciding Ties—If Any

Actual Size, 11x7 Inches

In case of ties those tied for any prize will be presented with a second puzzle, which will consist of drawing a line across the face of a chart of figures, like the accompanying chart, only larger, so that the figures thus connected when added together will total the greatest sum. If necessary this chart will be used four times, after which, should any ties remain, each contestant will receive full value of any prize tied for.

In case there are no ties on counting the Elephant no other puzzle, of course, will be presented.

Closing Date

The Great Elephant Puzzle Contest Will Close at Nine P. M. Saturday, November 8th, 1924.

The earlier you send in your solution the longer time you will have to go over your figures, AND SEND IN ANOTHER SOLUTION, if you find you can do better. Additional charts may be secured at any time by calling at the address below or sending a self-addressed, stamped envelope for mailing them. NO SOLUTION CAN BE CHANGED AFTER IT HAS BEEN ONCE REGISTERED.

Important Facts To Remember

While the amount you pay with a solution of the puzzle does not have any effect on your winning a prize, it does affect the amount you will receive, should you win one of the first nine prizes, as the value of these prizes is determined by what the winners pay. This is explained in the prize list, which you should study carefully before sending in your solution.

The time a solution is received has no bearing upon its winning a prize. Accuracy is what counts.

Not more than one prize will be awarded to any one person.

And here are delightful new styles also in the popular plain colors, measuring up to a very high standard of quality at this price—

CHOICE at this price is by no means limited to cloth dresses—for there are silks here in splendid abundance and variety for those who prefer them. And they uphold the same high value-standard. Satins, bengalines, satin-back canton crepes and other popular silks are included. Straight-line styles prevail, and tunic effects are also much in evidence. Both belted and beltless modes—with long sleeves coming in for a big share of the honors. Staple shades, of course—blues and browns and blacks. This is a feature price in our Dress Section for the season, and you may be very sure that we are putting into it the very best that we can secure for so little!

Fashion Has Really Outdone Herself in These

Coats

YOU'VE possibly been struck by the surpassing beauty of the new coat styles, and will readily agree with us in saying that Fashion has outdone herself in them. This will be found particularly true in connection with a group of handsome new models at $59.50. We just know that Dame Fashion is proud of these examples of her handiwork, and we feel just as sure that you'll be equally as proud of any selection which you may make from this group. And there's such distinctiveness and variety that you're sure to find one that was intended just for you.

Note this list of rich and luxurious

Materials

Downy-Wool
Cut Chinchilla
Mokine
Kashara
Broadcloth
Brytonia

FROM such a list as this you have the opportunity of choosing, each one having been accorded a favored place in Fashion's eyes. Be very well assured also that they have been wrought with expert care.

What about the shades, you ask? Just those that lend richness and even added beauty, being at the same time thoroughly practical and serviceable.

Here are some of them—

Shades

Tan—Brown
Green—Rust

and handsome stylish stouts in

Brown—Tan and Black

WHAT about the trimming? Many of them are untrimmed, presenting an appearance of decided smartness and sturdy character.

Many also are fur-trimmed. In fact furs seem to have won their way further into Fashion's heart this season than for a great while past. Their use is so general that it would be most difficult to decide which is most popular.

In this particular group you'll find these—

Fur Trimmings

Muskrat
Australian Opossum
French Seal
Marmink
Nutria and Fox

Miss Ruby Weaver Weds Mr. Childers At Pretty Ceremony

A marriage of interest to a large circle of friends was that of Miss Ruby Weaver and Horace Childers, which was solemnized Tuesday evening at 8:30 o'clock.

Rev. James H. Bell, pastor of the North Atlanta Baptist church, performed the impressive ceremony in the presence of an assemblage of family connections and a few intimate friends.

Mrs. Ed. O. Riordan, sister of the bride, was her only attendant. Mrs. Riordan was gowned in a striking gown of black satin and lace, with which she wore a picture hat adorned with black paradise. She carried an arm bouquet of red roses.

The bride was given in marriage by her father, S. T. Weaver. They were met at the altar by the groom and Ed. O. Riordan, who acted as best man. The bride's unusual beauty was enhanced by her costume of black satin and lase embroidered with circulets of rhinestones. A hat of black lace and dainty black satin slippers, ornamented with lace buckles with rhinestone centers, completed her costume. She carried a gorgeous shower bouquet of bride's roses and lilies of the valley.

Mr. Childers and his bride left during the evening for Memphis and points of interest in the north. The bride's traveling costume was a smart three-piece suit of green wolen bengaline trimmed with fur. Her becoming hat was a semi-tailored model of velvet and felt.

The bride is the third daughter of Mr. and Mrs. S. T. Weaver, and the sister of Mrs. Guy Haygood, Mrs Ed O. Riordan, Misses Louise and Evelyn Weaver and Fred, Boyd and Henry Weaver.

Mr. Childers is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Horace Childers. He is well known in Atlanta business circles, being connected with M. Rich Brothers Co.

Miss Brown Weds Mr. Coursey.

Griffin, Ga., September 27.—A beautiful home wedding of Sunday afternoon was that of Miss Janie Clarice Brown, of Atlanta, and Charles Milton Coursey, also of Atlanta, which took place at 3 o'clock at the home of the bride's cousins, Mr. and Mrs. W. C. McAbee, in East Griffin, the Rev. Charles B. Jones officiating.

The decorations were artistic and beautiful. The ceremony was performed in the living room before an improvised altar of palms and ferns in one corner of the room. An arch covered in white and twined with southern smilax was arranged above the altar and below were two white lattice gates, open, which were twined with smilax.

The mantel was banked with smilax, and glimmering through the greenery was a long row of white candles. Tall white baskets of purple asters, pink roses and dahlias were placed about the room, and wall vases held clusters of pink geraniums, pink zinnias and long, graceful sprays of ivy.

Immediately preceding the ceremony W. C. McAbee sang "Because" and "I Love You Truly." Mrs. Fred Thaxton accompanied him on the piano.

The bridal party entered the living room to the strains of Mendelssohn's wedding march, played by Mrs. Thaxton, who played softly "The Chapel in the Mountains," by Wilson, during the ceremony.

The ring-bearer, Herman Brown, of Newborn, the young brother of the bride, entered first. He was dressed in a suit of white satin and carried the ring in a pink Columbia rosebud.

Little Miss Annie Fuller Townsend, of Atlanta, wearing white organdie, ruffled and lace-trimmed, was the flower girl. She carried a basket of pink and white half-bloom roses and swainsona, the long handles tied with pink tulle.

The bride entered with her maid of honor, Miss Margaret Coursey, of Atlanta, and was met at the altar by the groom and his best man, Clifford Longino, if Atlanta.

The bride was lovely in brown satin trimmed in bands brocaded in two-tone brown velvet. Her hat was fashioned of light and dark brown silk and velvet, and her corsage was of bride roses, ferns and swainsona.

Miss Coursey wore a becoming gown of brick-dust satin crepe with trimmings of sage green chiffon embroidered in brick-dust silk threads. With this she wore a small hat to match ornamented with French flowers. Her corsage was of pink radiance roses and misty ferns.

A reception fallowed the ceremony. Punch was served on the wide front porch from a table prettily decorated with long sprays of ivy, bright colored nasturtiums and bunches of pink tokay grapes. Miss Thelma Powell and Miss Gladys Stallworth presided at the punch bowl.

The presents were displayed in the music room, where pink roses, zinnias, dahlias and ferns had been charmingly arranged. The lights in the reception rooms were covered in white roses tied with narrow white satin ribbon.

Mrs. Richard Mitchell had charge of the bride's book.

Later in the afternoon Mr. and Mrs. Coursey left for Atlanta, from which point they left Sunday evening for their wedding trip to Miami, Fla. On their return they will be at home in Atlanta.

The bride's going-away gown was a tailored suit of black poiret twill, tucked and trimmed with small black buttons. Worn with a poudre-blue silk blouse and small hat of black satin with feathers on both sides.

Captain Heath Is Honor Guest at Birthday Party

The Earl house, Clayton, Ga., was the scene of a delightful social function Monday evening, September 22. The occasion was the seventy-ninth birthday of Captain P. S. Heath, Confederate veteran, of Thomasville, Ga., and tax collector of his county.

Mrs. J. F. Earl and Mrs. William Calhoun Massie, daughter of Captain Heath, were the charming hosts to the twenty-six guests of this popular hostelry.

The spacious dining room, inclosed in glass and beautiful for situation in that it commands an entrancing view of mountain and lake, forest and valley, was most artistically decorated in autumn flowers and leaves, the color scheme being the Confederate red and white.

The same color motif was carried out to the minutest detail in the decorations of the long festal board. Flamboyant flowers, flaming leaves, and candles, lent a glow and vividness to the gala scene. The birthday cake, the centerpiece, was mounted high upon a pedestal, the base of which was enveloped in a mantle of brilliant leaves, through which temptingly peeped rosy-cheeked apples, fresh from the Earl orchards. Surmounting this were circles of red tapers, the apex of the delicious confection being adorned with the number 79 in red upon the icing of white.

The place cards were most unique, being white decorated in hand-painted designs, further embellished with autumn leaves suggestive of the profession or the outstanding characteristics of the respective guests. The menu was delicious and fully sustained the wide reputation of the Earl house for culinary excellency.

A. K. Brokaw, of Miami, Fla., was toastmaster. His remarks were most happy. He called upon Mrs. Mary McCutcher-East, of Lexington, Ky., and Daytona Beach, Fla., to respond to a toast to the honor guest. Mrs. East, in verse, gave a brief outline of the colorful career of Captain Heath. Beautiful gifts from the guests and family were presented to him.

Colonial Tea Given by Club.

One of the most enjoyable affairs of the season was the colonial tea given by the Cosmopolitan Study club on Constitution day, September 17. The tea was given at the home of Mr. and Mrs. B. H. As the first number on the program, "The Star-Spangled Banner" was sung by those present. Mrs. Ernest G. Bentley was the accompanist.

Following this was a splendid address on the constitution, by B. H. Sullivan. The third number on the program was music by Mrs. Bentley. Next on the program was James Whitcomb Riley's beautiful poem, "The Name of Old Glory," given by Miss Julianna Trowbridge.

After the program a most interesting patriotic contest was put on by Mrs. J. D. Conley. The prize, a copy of Barrie's "The Little Minister," was won by Ernest G. Bentley. Mrs. Durand Smith won the booby.

The hostess was assisted in entertaining by Mrs. C. G. Trowbridge, who as social chairman of the club, was most gracious. Mrs. Trowbridge wore an evening gown of black satin, and Mrs. Sullivan wore a dainty frock of pink georgette.

The club is planning a benefit performance for the Tallulah Falls school in October. This will be given at the Lee Street auditorium and will include some of Atlanta's best talent.

Mrs. Louis Elsas Directs Work Of Atlanta Junior Red Cross

The Atlanta chapter of the Junior Red Cross, with Mrs. Louis Elsas, well-known Atlanta woman as chairman, is promoting one of the most far-reaching and most wonderful activities. Through organization work in the city schools that of sending small gift boxes by girls and boys to be distributed at Christmas to the children of other lands and in our insular territories.

Mrs. Elsas Directs.

Mrs. Elsas has ably and intelligently directed the distribution of 5,000 Christmas boxes through the city schools to be filled with gifts for poor children in foreign countries. Every year these boxes are filled just at this time in order for them to reach their destination in time for the holiday season.

The children of Atlanta and the different schools receive such beautiful letters of thanks from children in the countries to which these boxes are sent, and in many instances our little foreign friends say: "If it had not been for your kindness we would not have had any Christmas at all."

The following letters have been received from children in foreign countries in appreciation of the Christmas boxes sent to them last year. This expression of appreciation comes as a great source of gratification to those who worked to make the Junior Red Cross chapter of Atlanta come up to the 100 per cent standard of their director, Mrs. Elsas.

Atlanta Woman Given High Position in Insurance Field

Photograph by Mathewson & Price, Staff Photographers.

Mrs. Ethel Mays Woofter, who is one of Atlanta's most prominent young business women, and who was recently appointed superintendent of the Atlanta agency of the New York Mutual Life Insurance company.

Woman's advance in the business world, her new-born tendency to step into places formerly consigned to men by popular and insistent consent, is strikingly illustrated in Atlanta by the case of Mrs. Ethel Mays Woofter, who has just been appointed superintendent of the Atlanta agency of the New York Mutual Life Insurance company, which comprises as a territory southwest, middle and north Georgia.

Mrs. Woofter's rise in the business world has something of the Horatio Alger tang to it—so meteoric has it been. She has risen to her present post of importance in three short years, and the first of those years was index enough to what she would eventually accomplish.

Born in Opelika, Ala., Mrs. Woofter, as Miss Ethel Mays, chose the teaching profession, and after normal education and a course at the University of Chicago, entered actively into that field, her last teaching position being at Washington seminary in this city.

It was from there she went to the Atlanta office of the New York Mutual, of which R. F. Shedden, prominent Atlantan, is manager. Her success in the field was instant, and within a short time after assuming her duties she was put in charge of the woman's division.

For the full three years she has been with the local agency she has qualified for the Quarter-Million-Dollar Field club, an honor in that company which carries with it particular reward. Each of the three years she has sold at least $300,000 worth of life insurance. Once, in October, 1922, she led all the salesmen of her company in the United States, and never has she been lower than thirteenth in the ranks of the fifty who are monthly named as the highest.

"Belief in yourself and hard, hard work" is the slogan which Mrs. Woofter states as her only reason for success. And the record she has made proves its value.

The new position which Mrs. Woofter holds, since the recent resignation of Sam W. Carson, gives her supervision over all the agencies in the territory, with the authority to appoint agents and direct their activities. It is a post of high importance, but there are none who can deny that her admirable record justifies her selection.

Ruth Draper Will Present Original Character Sketches

Ruth Draper will present her original character sketches at the Atlanta Woman's club auditorium on Thursday evening, October 2, at 8:15 o'clock under the auspices of the Atlanta Drama league, and her overwhelming success is one of the most remarkable ever known in amusement annals. At first her triumph in London, followed by a genuine ovation in Paris, were regarded as distinctions never before won by an American artist. She ever went a step further when she presented her original sketches to equally enthusiastic audiences in Madrid. At a time when America was marveling at the reception here of two companies of Russian players, Ruth Draper, an American, was carrying an American art to the most famous capitals of Europe.

From coast to coast her characterizations have been given, and whether in San Francisco, Chicago, Philadelphia or Boston, she has been cordially greeted by capacity houses. No longer is she considered a monologist. She ranks with the foremost actresses and attracts her audiences in the same way that a regular theatrical production does. In New York city her Sunday nights at the Selwyn theater became an institution and her houses are invariably sold out in advance. Such attendance is awarded only to artists who have won and held popularity. This wonderful success is due to the unique art which Miss Draper has so keenly developed. Her original character sketches are frequently referred to as monologues, but monologues they are not in the accepted sense of the word. She does not merely present one-sided conversation, she presents and enacts little cameos of characters that one minute hold her audience tense in pathos, the next moment laughing at the foibles of easily-recognized society types. Her characters are perfectly wrought; each one lives; there is a subtle quality of finish about her work that stamps it as the work of an artist who loves her art.

MISS RUTH DRAPER.

About fifty attended the banquet.

San Carlo Opera Co. To Present 'Madame Butterfly'

Society's annual problem of "where to go before the New Year's eve party gets really going good?" appears to be solved for this year at least. A combination of real grand opera from 8 to 11, and supper and dancing from 11 to dawn will give Atlanta such a New Year's eve opportunity as she has never known before.

For Russell Bridges has announced that he will bring to the auditorium for New Year's eve the San Carlo Opera company, with "Madame Butterfly" as the opera and Tamaki Miura, the Japanese soprano, in the title role.

The San Carlo company was heard by many Atlantans during the music festival week at Asheville recently. It presented eight performances there, and even opera-goers accustomed to the magnificence of the Metropolitan productions, came home praising Mr. Fortune Gallo's more modest but thoroughly finished presentations of the standard works.

Mr. Bridges is to present rather an ambitious series of attractions this season. First of all, there is Vladimir de Pachmann, the veteran pianist, now making his farewell tour of America; and late in January, Paul Whiteman, in person, at the head of his famous orchestra. They are making their second American tour after a summer in Europe, which created a veritable furore. Ruth St. Denis and her dancers, and Mischa Elman, the violinist, who made the "Elman tone" celebrated, complete the list of attractions.

Call to Quitman Convention Issued by Georgia President

Mrs. Walter Grace, president of the Georgia Division, U. D. C., issues the following call to Georgia Daughters:

The thirteenth annual convention, U. D. C. of Georgia, will be held in Quitman October 28-30. Quitman chapter, Mrs. J. N. Haddock, president, being the hostess chapter. The opening exercises will be held on Tuesday evening, October 28, at 8 o'clock, in the First Baptist church. The executive board will meet on Tuesday afternoon at 3 o'clock in the Sunday school room of the church.

Mrs. Albert Tidwell is chairman of homes and must be notified regarding attendance of delegates. Credentials must be presented at the church on Tuesday afternoon at 5 o'clock, Mrs. W. C. Vereen, chairman of credentials, duplicate credentials being sent preceding the convention to Mrs. Walter Grace.

The treasurer's books will close October 7.

Mrs. Grace incorporates in the convention call an urgent plea to chapters to meet the obligation incurred by the division for the Jefferson Davis Monument fund. Only $179 is needed to complete the endowment fund for the Georgia room in the Richmond museum of the Confederacy. If each chapter, Mrs. Grace declares, will contribute $2 to this fund, the endowment will be completed. Increased attention to the sale of "Women in the South in War Times" is urged in the convention call and a strong appeal made for the fund established in honor of Miss Mildred Lewis Rutherford as an historian's fund. Other lines of division activity to which attention is directed includes scholarships, the loan fund for girls of Confederate lineage, the educational fund for the use of boys of Confederate lineage, and the work for the Soldiers' home. "Stone Mountain" will be the keynote of the convention and Quitman is planning delightful social attentions, with Mrs. A. B. Hull as chairman of this important feature of the gathering.

Bestowal of crosses of service at the one remaining date on which this may be done before the convention is urgently requested by Mrs. Grace. Further emphasis is being given to this tribute to Confederate ancestry by Mrs. Walter Lamar, who offers a loving cup to the chapter bestowing the largest number of crosses of service during the present year. This cup has been named by Mrs. Lamar the "Blount Memorial Cup."

Amendments to constitution and by-laws to be voted on at the convention are:

Article V, Section 1.—Constitution: There shall be five districts, north, east, south, west, central. The annual convention shall be in one district and then another in order, thus rotating in the state, the city for meeting to be named by district. Delegates to pay their expenses.

Article III, Section 1.—Constitution: Omit last sentence, which prohibits more than one chapter in cities of less than 15,000.

Article V, Section II.—Constitution: State chairmen must be included in number of delegates to which chapters are entitled.

Article III.—By-Laws: Minutes must be in hands of the printer not later than December 15.

Article VII.—By-Laws: Registrar must make report on application paper within two months after papers are sent.

Mrs. R. L. Cater Urges Support of "Veteran."

Mrs. R. L. Cater, of Perry, Georgia division, U. D. C., chairman of subscriptions for The Confederate Veteran magazine, says of The Veteran: "In its pages historians will look for a living, colorful account of the Confederacy, and each issue is replete with vivid reminisences and poetry which rings of our own southland. In the coming months its pages will portray the development of the story being told in granite by the hand of Gutzon Borglum on the sheer side of Stone mountain, and from time to time The Veteran will record the progress of the figures of Lee, Davis, Jackson, Gordon, as grows this great monument at the bidding of genius and through the foresight and determination of a southern woman, Mrs. Helen C. Plane.

"The educational value of The Veteran makes it incumbent upon every chapter in the division to urge upon its members subscriptions to the only publication which links today with the record of the southland when possessed of an entity all its own—the days of the 60s and the half a century of distinctly southern culture and chivalry that went before the 60s."

Every chapter in the division is asked to send at once to Mrs. Cater eran makes its incumbent upon every scribers to The Veteran, that the Georgia division may be properly reported in regard to this obligation at the October convention, to be held in Quitman, beginning October 28.

Firesides Are Cultivated as the Wind Grows Crisp

WHEN the wind plaintively cries outside your windows and the dismal Fall rain patters unceasingly on the panes — you will snuggle deeper in your cosy armchair, stretch your toes again toward the crackling fire and sigh—a deep contented sigh that just seems to say "there's no place like home!"

You will smile as you watch Daddy sitting on the davenport with his arms full of little folks. You will remember how tired he looked when he came from the office and it will do your heart good to hear him weaving nonsensical tales to the children, and laughing like a boy at their spellbound attention.

Students' Loan Fund

The following letter has been issued to D. A. R. regents of Georgia:

"Dear Madam Regent:

"Our beloved society D. A. R. is making a personal appeal to you and each member of your chapter to cooperate with the society in this splendid work we have undertaken, the "D. A. R. student loan fund." Education is one of the greatest uplifting forces known to mankind. If we can be the means of helping to dispel the darkness of ignorance and let in the light of education and knowledge to the minds of our boys and girls, we will have done a work divine. So many of our young people are ambitious and anxious to pursue their studies in colleges and universities, to fit them for some definite work but haven't the funds to do so. In creating the student loan fund, we enable them to borrow the necessary amount to complete their course of study and at some future time repay this sum, thus keeping the fund full and active. It is a helpful and far-reaching plan and I am sure your chapter will support it, by contributing $1.00 per capita, or more, to the D. A. R. student loan fund. The amount to be acquired is $5,000. The D. A. R. of Georgia is bending every effort to raise $2,000 of this amount this year—April, 1924, to April, 1925. We can do it! We must do it! We will do it! Will you help? If every D. A. R. in Georgia would give one dollar, the entire amount could be raised this year. I beg that your membership catch the divine spark of inspiration that shall burst into a consuming flame of active service, for this great opportunity, God has given us, to help in so splendid a work.

"Please appoint a committee in your chapter to take up this work at once, to raise as much money as possible for this fund, as scores of students are knocking at our doors, crying for help. Will you answer the call? Please reply.

"Cordially yours,
"MRS. BUN WYLIE,

"State Chairman, D. A. R. Student Loan Fund, 107 Peachtree Place, Atlanta, Ga."

"Committee—Mrs. Julian C. Lane, Statesboro; Mrs. John Daniel, Savannah; Mrs. Rogers Miller, Macon; Mrs. W. B. Smith, Fort Valley; Mrs. Julia White, Athens; Mrs. Charles Rice, Atlanta; Mrs. J. M. High, Atlanta."

From Georga, the state which raised the first student loan fund, was chosen the first national chairman, and there follows extracts from the report made by Mrs. Talmadge at the 33rd Continental congress:

"I think you will agree with me when I say this is one of our broadest fields of service, for it affords an opportunity for a very practical application of our D. A. R. creed. It is an inspiring thought to know that we are actually aiding our boys and girls over our country to an education, and not simply preaching principles. From personal experience and by advice of several presidents of colleges, I have found that the best results have come from student loan funds rather than gift scholarships. It creates ambition, responsibility and self-respect in the minds of the recipients. The expressed interest and earnest desire of the different state chairmen to increase this fund next year shows plainly that the whole movement is being favorably received.

"To summarize. The amount given in loan funds this year, $13,541. The value of the combined loan funds, which are now in the process of being raised, $25,510. The loan funds which have been completed and are now in use, $11,500, therefore, the total amount of $39,010 represents the sum invested by the D. A. R. in student loan funds.

"I feel it is a distinct honor to have been the first chairman of this 'baby committee.' As its chairman mother, I vision for it a brilliant future of service to humanity when this 'toddling infant' shall have reached years of maturity, and shall be second to none in importance and in the greatness of its achievement."

Mrs. W. B. Smith, state chairman Caroline Scott Harrison Memorial committee, Fort Valley, is making an appeal to each chapter in the state to make a gift to the institution which played such an important part in the early years of our first president general. Oxford is in Ohio and the Ohio D. A. R.'s express a willingness to do the lion's part and to date they have given over two-thirds of the total amount contributed. Mrs. Harrison was our president general, and each state will share in honoring her memory with this national memorial.

Mrs. Smith writes:

"From the beginning of civilization, mankind has honored its heroes; those who have rendered service to their fellow men.

"The opportunity is now at hand for the women of our country, the Daughters of the American revolution, to pay homage to one of the greatest among our number, our first president general, the wife of a former president, Mrs. Benjamin Harrison (Caroline Scott). In honoring her memory we are serving the future womanhood and motherhood of our country, whose education is of paramount importance; a service eminently fitting to her and her alma mater.

"A dormitory, at Oxford college, Canton, Ohio, founded by her father, Dr. Witherspoon Scott, is the memorial which the national society D. A. R. is building to our honored first president general."

Tennille Chapter

A goodly number of members and invited guests greeted the opening meeting of the Major General Samuel Elbert chapter, held at the home of the regent, Mrs. George Riley, on Friday, September 19, Mesdames W. B. Smith and Colon Sessions assisting as co-hostesses.

The regent, who is now serving her third year, had the business thoroughly planned and it was expeditiously dispatched.

The beautiful new year books were presented to the chapter and were admired by all. Upon the title page was a tender tribute to our eldest member, Mrs. Loula Kendall Rogers. The regent also presented to her a dainty box of stationery, bearing the D. A. R. insignia. In the absence of the recipient, her daughter, Mrs H. M. Franklin, responded gracefully, offering a beautiful toast to the regent. A silver baby spoon was also presented by the regent to little Anne Joiner, the chapter mascot.

An instructive and thrilling program was afterward rendered. The history of the constitution was studied and the lives and services of the Marquis de LaFayette and General Pershing, whose birthdays come in September, were discussed. A valuable paper on the "Mission of LaFayette in America," was contributed by Mrs. W. C. Little; a patriotic duet was rendered by Mesdames Roy Smith and J. C. Hamilton; a violin solo played by little Dorothy Jordan, and the highly dramatic poem, "To All French Hearts;" was exquisitely rendered by Mrs. Mack Shurling.

MRS. W. C. LITTLE,
Chapter Editor

Thomaston Chapter

The first fall meeting of John Houston chapter was held on September 10, with Mrs. Alvah Weaver Jr., regent, presiding.

After an absence of many months, Mrs. J. F. Lewis, honorary regent, and Mrs. R. E. Hightower, Sr., auditor and past recording secretary, answered to roll call and were cordially welcomed by the chapter.

Excellent reports were given by the officers and chairmen. The memorial scholarship will be placed at the University of Georgia at Athens, for benefit of the same young man who used it last year and was graduated with honors from the Sixth District A. & M. school, at Barnesville.

Several members made remarks on the national defense test day, and the chapter decided to show its sympathy with the movement by the display of flags on that day.

After the business session, an interesting and instructive program was given. There were readings on "The Framers of the Constitution," "La Fayette," and "Magna Charta," interspersed with instrumental music by Miss Josephine Williams.

MRS. E. F. MATTHEWS,
Recording Secretary.

The Hawkinsville year book, which has just been received, is artistically arranged and contains a well-outlined program. It is gratifying that in these times of national unrest and hidden anarchy, to find this year book has dedicated the first two pages to expressions o ftrue Americanism. At the November meeting Mrs. Wilkins, state second vice regent, is scheduled to make an address.

At the first fall meeting of John Clarke chapter, Social Circle, the treasurer was instructed to send to the state treasurer the Ellis Island fund, the 25 cents per capita manual dues, and the 50 cents per capita to student loan fund. High school scholarship, $20, was given a deserving girl. Plans were made to reimburse the treasury before the October meeting. The regent, Mrs. Shepherd, reported on the defense test day program held at the high school. Papers were read on "The Source of the Constitution" and "LaFayette's Visit to America."

News From Shorter College.

Rome, Ga., September 27.—With the strongest faculty in its history and a large enrollment, Shorter college has entered upon a year that promises to be most successful. Many great educational institutions have contributed to the faculty, and 11 states are represented in the student body. Thirteen students, who are registered either from Atlanta or Decatur, include Misses Elizabeth Fall, Helen Wikle, Mary Moritz, Dorothy Moody, Evelyn Sheffield, Mary Park Ansley, Helen Walthall, Rebecca Sheen, Ethel Brown, Louise Paine, Leone Mooney, Mabel Connolly, Katherine Kooce.

Since the formal opening on September 15, classes have met regularly and all college activities have been begun. The first 10 days witnessed "rushing season," a membership drive by the two literary societies, Eunomian and Polymnian. On Monday morning new students made their pledges, the result being a victory for the Polymnians.

The two organizations vied with each other in the beauty of entertainments. The Eunomian, of which Miss Edith Hughes, of Bartow, Fla., is president, entertained with a charming play, entitled "A Woman's Might." The cast of characters included: Eunomia, Miss Georgia Chamberlain, Atlanta; Jupiter, Miss Evelyn Sheffield, of Atlanta; Charles, cousin of Eunomia, Miss Hughes; Eros, Miss Ida Cheney Bryan; sisters of Eunomia, Misses Lucy Cobb, Hawkinsville; Dorothy Moody, Atlanta; Sara Brown, Newnan; Margaret Haynes, Mildred Morris, Bartow, Fla.; Talitha Smith, McDonough; pages, Misses Adelle Moss, Marietta, and Elizabeth Johnston, Canton. The play was written by Miss Hazel Tuggle, of Atlanta, a former member.

The play presented by the Polymnian society, of which Miss Margaret Hendricks, Tifton, is acting president, interpreted the history and ideals of the organization which gets its name from that of the muse of poetry and music. Miss Hendricks played the role of Polymnia; Miss Frances Hale, Mayfield, Ky., was her lover, Peter Pan; Miss Vera Cochran, Camilla, impersonated Polymnia's mother, and Miss Anne Young, Cedartown, took the part of "My Mammy," who figures in the traditional history of the society. Students who presented feature dances were: Misses Louise Rumble, Barnesville; Lucy Shivers, Eatonton; Caroline Henderson, Columbus; Mary Moritz, Atlanta; Mary and Helen Hardaman, Commerce; Mildred Tyler, Albany; Ora Upshaw, Covington; Lucile Williams, Coruele; Louise Dye, Blythe; Mary Lynn Brogden, Kenwood; Isabel Jones, Milledgeville; Frances Johnson, Washington. Miss Louise Bennet and Misses Eleanor Joiner, Camilla; Jewel Henry, Cordele, and Anne Young gave several solos.

North Avenue School Begins Active Work.

The initiation party on Friday afternoon was one of the events of the opening week of the North Avenue Presbyterian school. Under the direction of the sophomore class, led by their chairman, Miss Martha Crawford, the new girls of the year were entertained.

The class chairmen who have been elected are: Virginia Brittani, senior; Jane Carmack, junior; Martha Crawford, sophomore; Marion Bryan, freshman. The freshman class dog show when the class mascot will be chosen will take place October 2.

The Cecilians under the presidency of Miss Mary Ellis, presented a short play at assembly on Wednesday morning with Dorothy Fluker as the hero; Jane Dillion the vamp; Margaret Cochran the ingenue and Flora May Tumlin as tragedienne. Junior high assembly has started its year's work and elected for officers: Elizabeth Howard, president; Jaqulin Moore, vice president; Martha Williams, secretary; Flossie Hill, treasurer. Junior Red Cross work has included filling 200 Christmas boxes for overseas children.

On Thursday afternoon the faculty was entertained by Miss Askew, in welcome to the new members of the faculty, Rev. and Mrs. W. T. Hollingsworth, Miss Augusta Roberts and Miss Lula McMichael. Assisting in entertaining were the Pi Sigma Kappa girls, members of the school's honor society, who are Jane Dillon, Mary Ellis, Alice Glenn, Ethel Reid and Mary Williamson.

"Southern Mothers Suggested This New Kind of Laxative"

Second of a Series of Three Interviews With W. L. Hand

"During the many years that I ran a drug store at Charlotte, it was an every-day occurrence for women to ask me for something in liquid form to be given the children in place of calomel and castor oil.

"I got to studying this problem and found that if I could get a happy balance between certain vegetable ingredients, some of which act on the liver and some on the bowels, I would be able to fill this very universal and very definite need.

"I employed scientific methods and tested one combination after another until, finally, I hit upon a formula which proved up exactly right.

Mothers Pleased.

"After that, I answered the daily question by handing out a bottle of Liv-o-Lax, and the demand for it grew so rapidly (from one mother recommending Liv-o-Lax to another) that I finally had to give up the drug store and start a factory.

Available To All Now.

"Now I am able to tell this story of Liv-o-Lax to every family and to say that you can get Liv-o-Lax at your own drug store.

"If any one in the family is bilious, constipated, stomach not doing its duty, or with a cold coming on, get Liv-o-Lax and give it a try.

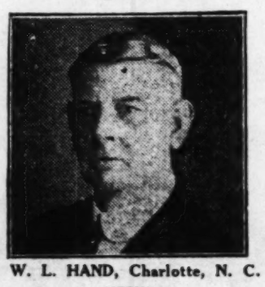

Really a Double Action.

"I will guarantee that Liv-o-Lax will not only clear the bowels, but relieve liver congestion as well, and it is in this latter respect that so many family laxatives fall short.

"I will be glad to send a sample. Write me."

Hearing Music in New York

A STUDIO RECITAL

BY MARGUERITE BARTHOLOMEW

During a period of musical famine, which elapses betwen the conclusion of the summer orchestral concerts at the Lewisohn stadium in New York and the advent of the musical season in October, the announcement of a select soiree at the studio of Mme. Lydia Cherassky, mother of the boy artist, Shura Cherkassky, proved recently a particularly welcome diversion.

Two years ago the Cherkassky family—father, mother and young Shura—after weathering the storm and stress of political revolution in Odessa, Russia, were permitted by the soviet government to make their way to America, joining relatives in Baltimore. There the amazing genius of little Shura, aged 11, attracted wide-spread attention. He was heralded as the most remarkable youthful prodigy since the days of Josef Hofmann's first appearance on the American concert stage as a boy of 9, and the scope and maturity of his artistry baffled critics and musicians alike.

Taught By Mother.

Taught solely by his mother, herself a gifted musician and former teacher of piano at the Odessa conservatoire, the lad's training has been sanely and intelligently supervised. No effort has been made to force or exploit his natural precocity, with the result that he is today a wholesome, lovable boy, entirely unspoiled by the praise and attention that has been showered upon him.

Mme. Cherkassky has recently opened a studio in New York, and Shura's studies will be continued here. He will be permitted to give a limited number of concerts during the coming season and will make his debut in New York.

Sharing the honors of the evening with him on this occasion was the well-known composer-pianist of New York and Miami—Mme. Mana-Zucca; France Sebel, soprano; Peter Merenblum, pianist, and David Sisserman, cellist.

Wide Range of Style.

Mme. Mana-Zucca has won for herself an enviable niche in America's hall of fame by reason of her admirable musicianship. She is an indefatigable worker, and her compositions, graceful and mellifluous in style, range from the simple ballad and easy teaching repertoire to the difficult forms of ensemble and chamber music and choral works with orchestral accompaniment. In October her "Ode to Music" will be performed at the annual music festival in Portland, Maine, by a chorus of 1,000 voices, supported by the Philharmonic orchestra of New York.

A group of her songs, "The Cry of the Woman," "Sleep, My Darling" and "R chem," were sung by Miss Sebel in an artistic and sympathetic manner, and her trio for violin, cello and piano—she herself playing the piano part—was given a splendidly adequate performance by the three artists and was revealed as an opus of virility and interesting thematic development.

Hailed With Delight.

Shura Cherassky's remarkable pianism elicited enthusiastic encominums. With Peter Merenblum, he played the "Kreutzer Sonata" for violin and piano by Beethoven with keen appreciation of its lofty and intrinsic beauty. His solo groups included selections by Bach, Chopin, Liszt, Rachmaninoff, Tschaikowski and Mana-Zucca, all rendered in the masterful and authoritative style of the artist, with a blending of poetical insight, intellectual grasp, rhythmical spontaneity and tonal beauty far beyond his years.

This repertoire numbers upwards of one hundred and fifty selections, all of which are memorized and at his ready command. Music study is in no sense drudgery for Shura. His daily practice seldom exceeds two or three hours; he is an intelligent and rapid worker, and his powers of concentration are remarkable. He is also a creative artist, and at the age of 4 produced his first opera. Like Wagner, he evolves both libretto and score. His manuscripts are neatly and carefully written and bear the decided impress of youthful genius and originality. He has a keen sense of humor, and takes gleeful satisfaction in explaining the crudely childish commonplaces contained in his early librettos and his heroic attempts at dramatic effects.

Shura loves America, and an occasional moving picture is his favorite form of recreation.

Mrs. Redwine Is Hostess to Club.

Mrs. E. M. Redwine entertained the "42" club this past week at her home, she being assisted in entertaining by her daughter, Miss Louis Redwine.

Those present were Mrs. R. J Ingram, Mrs. N. T. McPherson, Sr., Mrs. A. M. Fincher, Mrs. J. M. Nash, Jr., Mrs. Ross Gerner, Mrs. J. M. Young, Mrs. J. E. Corry, Mrs Louis Redwine and Mrs. E. M. Redwine.

MEN'S SUNDAY SCHOOL CLASSES TO ORGANIZE

Every young men's Sunday school class interested in enlarging their membership are requested to send two delegates to represent them at the first council meeting of the young men classes of the churches in the city. The meeting will be held at the Second Baptist church Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock, in the EEE classroom.

Plans to get a greater number of the college students to attend some Sunday school will be the principal subject for discussion.

Girl Scout Training Class To Be Held

New Girl Scout leaders, eleven in number, are now taking the training course being conducted at Girl Scout headquarters, 614 Chamber of Commerce, and those troops which have been temporarily without leaders will soon be supplied.

The past week has been devoted to methods of organizing and managing a troop, with emphasis on games and contests as a means of developing group spirit in the patrol of eight girls which is the unit of work and play in a girl scout troup. The game method of instruction is one of the fundamental principles of scouting which keeps the relations between the captain and the scouts that of older and younger sisters rather than teacher and pupil.

This week will be devoted to out-of-door activities, nature study, organized hikes, building fires of various kinds, cooking in trenches and in the open without utensils, songs and stunts to be used around the camp fire. The girl scout nature program stresses the importance of preserving our flowers, shrubs, birds and other wild life. Many troops have collected the seeds of the rarer wild flowers and will plant them in the spring, so that instead of tearing up and destroying the natural beauty spots of the country and roadsides they are endeavoring to preserve those which already exist and to develop others.

The training class will continue for two weeks longer, meeting on Tuesday and Thursday afternoons at 3 o'clock and Saturday mornings at 10 o'clock. Any one who is interested in constructive leadership of the girls between the ages of ten and 18 years will be welcomed at any or all of the classes.

The following new leaders have registered during the past week: Mrs. F. F. LaRoche and Mrs. W. L. Johnson, East Lake; Mrs. E. W. Leard and Miss Jean Kendrick, Fort McPherson; Miss Eugenia Linch, Miss Louise Carroll, Miss Martha Dennison, Miss Elizabeth Floding, Mrs. Ruby Lacy, Mrs. Charles R. Justi, Mrs. Harry G. Mitchell.

FRANK TOURIST COMPANY JUBILEE CRUISE PLANNED

The Frank travel organization was established in 1875 and the business was later more definitely organized as the Frank Tourist company, ith home offices in New York, and now reaches throughout the world.

The coming cruise will be termed "Jubilee Cruise," in celebration of the 15th anniversary, and unusual efforts and preparations are being made to make it the most successful attempt in the many years of the company's long list of popular service. Vincent J. What's What in the Shops and about town

Fashion's Last Report.

There has been much gossip and talk and a great deal of guess work on the part of many as to the style shoe for fall. I made up my mind that I should find out definitely just where we stand at present and just what I should tell you to buy . . . hence, my interview with the buyer of Stewart Shoe Company last week. If anyone knows I would say that this company should be in position to tell—for we can only judge by the past and I have found Stewart Shoes always style right.

With complete reports of the Paris Fall Openings—a summary of the news fashions launched by every important house—innumerable sketches and photographs of dainty models and a tremendous and complete stock arriving every day—I found their buyer. He told me that the new shoes exquisitely simple and yet so smart. Yet with all this simplicity there is a shoe for every occasion—and each model distinctive and individual. There is less cut work, shorter vamps and heels of the height of the Louis heel, but dainty shaped like the old French heel, and toes more decidedly French than ever with their brunt round shape. Mr. Buyer also told me that he thought that gradually the women for dressy wear would come back to the plain opera pump. However, at present they want it just a wee bit decorated with a small cut-out pattern or a bit of trimming or stitching.

In accordance with these style notes he showed me a dear little slipper—a pump with a small cut-out pattern so designed as to give the hint of a Colonial pump. Around the cut work was stitching and perforations giving a dainty finish. This slipper is made in both patent leather and tan Russia calf. There were many other models any one of which will delight the heart of any woman. You simply can't go wrong in your purchase here—Stewart Shoes have long held decided preference with women of fashion in Atlanta. They are always correct and in the best of good taste.

After my visit with the buyer of the shoe departments I stopped to talk a minute with Mrs. Holloway at the hosiery department. Here, too, I found new colors and styles—there was the new blush shade in the sheerest of chiffon and also the inevitable nude, wood browns, Indian skin and many others. Stewart hosiery is truly in keeping with the high quality and style of their shoes. Each line of hosiery is a nationally advertising and standard make.

A Southern Exhibit.

Housewives simply can't afford to miss the Southeastern fair this year, according to an announcement made by the papers. There are to be the largest and most attractive Pure Food exhibits and demonstrations ever held in the south running throughout the entire week of the fair.

This Food Show is being staged to boost the use of Georgia products and is being sponsored by the L. W. Rogers Company. And, of course, as is the way of the Rogers stores, they are going to put the thing over in a real big way—they have secured for their display one-half of the automobile or manufacturers' building. In this building will be installed two complete model Rogers stores, and running the entire length of the building will be booth after booth, giving demonstrations of various food lines. For three months they have been working steadily to put on this tremendous show. A great array of beautiful fall decorations has been secured and is now being draped over and around these booths, and you can readily believe they will present one of the most beautiful pictures in all the displays at the fair grounds.

In addition to the demonstrations themselves, in which great quantities of food will be handed out to the visitors, there will be thousands of souvenirs and novelties and samples of all kinds. And there will be thousands of nobby and useful shopping bags handed out so that the visitors may gather up from booth to booth all the cook books, samples and other novelties given away by and through the Rogers Company.

Sponsoring this Pure Food show is only one of the many things the L. W. Rogers Company has done toward the development of Georgia

Products and so far as possible they will display whatever of good high-class Georgia products—such as are sold through their stores—as can be secured for this display.

Among the Georgia manufacturers exhibiting their products under the Rogers flag will be the Cairo Syrup Company, packers of the famous Georgia syrup; the Kauffman Candy Company, Columbus, Ga., candy manufacturers; the Southern Cotton Oil Company, Savannah, Ga., will display their Snowdrift and Wesson Oil; Frank E. Block Company, Atlanta, their famous cakes and crackers, and last among these, but surely not least, the wonderful display of Georgia apples by the Consolidated Apple Growers of Cornelia. There are some fifteen or more other manufacturers in the exhibit—you will have to see it for yourself; it is simply too big an event to tell about in so limited a space.

It is said that this show of the Rogers Company will be the most interesting and entertaining, as well as educational feature, at the fair this year, and the amount of samples and souvenirs, for both grown-ups and kiddies, will exceed the amount ever given away upon any similar occasion. I am truly glad to hear this good news; it only proves what I have known all along—that the Rogers Company is following its policy of putting things over in a big way.

An Announcement.

You will be glad to know—you who for years have so enthusiastically and so generously patronized the Keely Company—that their next annex is almost complete! That Atlanta is to have another real daylight store! A shop filled with light that you may better view the radiant colors and soft fabrics the fall has ushered in!

Clever designers have planned new arrangements and floor plans in the old store as well as the new annex. As each department is finished a new stock of goods—gowns, fabrics, and novelties—from New York and abroad is coming to take the place of the old. And what becomes of the old, which is really not old—well, here's good news for bargain hunters! Of course, you understand that a great many new fall things arrived in August and the first of this month—that is before the work was completed—and now as the carpenters and workmen move from one department to another the stock of goods is being put on sale at a wonderful reduction. Very little has been said of this removal sale and about the new store by the Keely company yet—but you can take this inside information and go down at once and you'll be delightfully surprised at the wonderful bargains you will find in the various departments.

It is hinted that not only the old departments will be enlarged but that several new departments will be added. And also, many new luxuries and comforts for both patrons and employee! For instance, an attractive rest room on the second floor has just been completed. Gayly fitted out in cretonnes and comfortable furnishings—just the place to rest a few minutes and break the tiresome long shopping trip. I am sorry I can't tell you all the new plans and arrangements yet—but they will soon be announced, it is said.

Buyers return daily with large collections of the most exclusive and beautiful things out of Paris—and are now ready for inspection at Keely's!

A smart costume shown by a New York house is a green bengaline coat-dress edged with a band of moleskin. They are identical with those of a coat.

A new length, and a very smart length, for the straight line coat is not quite a long coat nor a three-quarter coat—just about seven-eighths.—(adv.)

Vortex Double Down Draft Hot Blast Heaters Save Coal

The perfect Vortex Double Down Draft Combination secures three times the heat from the fuel over what is obtained in Oak Type and Ring Blast Heaters that universally starve fire by improper air supply.

Engineers have found that it requires over 200 cubic feet of air to properly burn one pound of soft coal. This fact is the reason for the Vortex Double Blast Tubes and for the remarkable Vortex Fuel Economy. The Vortex takes the chill from the entire room and gives solid comfort, and at the same time burns half the coal of the grate. The Heater will pay for itself in a short while. Society Takes on Fall Gaiety as Football Enters.

Musical Events Sponsored By Cultural Organizations Share in General Interest

Enter, football! Hearts are all aflutter today and every lovely debutante and her equally fetching sub-deb sister, will be found every Saturday afternoon at Grant field until Thanksgiving day comes around with its grand wind-up of this all-important feature of the fall season, both in social and college circles. Heroes and sponsors and members of the college set will wend their way every Saturday afternoon from the football game to fraternity dances at the chapter houses, and the tea hour will vie in interest with America's heroic sport. And ending the day of days each week in the younger set will be the Saturday evening dances at the clubs, at which both visiting stars and Atlanta's own will dance with the season's belles.

Interesting to almost as large a part of Atlanta society as is football and the social activities of the college set, are the delightful events provided for the delectation of Atlanta by the great cultural clubs of the city,—the Drama league, the Fine Arts club, the Art association, the Music club, and its youthful replica, the Junior Music club, and the initial programs of three of these great organizations will be given this week. Ruth Draper returns to the scene of previous triumphs on Thursday evening, sponsored by the Drama league; the Music club begins its winter series of morning musicales on Wednesday morning at the Biltmore, and the Junior Music club opens on Saturday afternoon.

Brilliant, but tinged with sadness, will be the outstanding social event of Monday, for farewell must be spoken to Dr. and Mrs. C. B. Wilmer, at the beautiful reception to be held that evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John M. Slaton on Peachtree road. Mrs. Joseph Williams, president of St. Luke's guild; Mrs. Francis Kamper, president of the Woman's auxiliary of St. Luke's; all of St. Luke's vestry, and the wife of each vestryman, will be in the receiving line which will do honor to a beloved minister, a great intellect and a splendid citizen, who leaves the rectorship of half a lifetime to take over work at the University of the South, Sewanee, even more far-reaching than has been his place in Georgia theological and cultural life.

Garden Club Meets.

In the afternoon, Monday, Mrs. Robert Alston will entertain the Peachtree Garden club at her home on Andrews drive, and Mrs. Edwin Johnson will describe to this delightful group the gardens and greenhouses she visited this summer in Magnolia, Mass.

Miss Katherine Stewart To Wed Mr. Lenhardt.

With announcement made today of the engagement of Miss Katherine Bowie Stewart to James Blanton Lenhardt, comes much genuine and cordial interest.

Miss Stewart is the youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edwin C. Stewart and a sister of Mrs. Frank Carter, formerly Miss Mary Stewart, and of John Pendleton Stewart.

Miss Stewart, who is a charming and talented young girl of much personal charm, is a descendant of one of the oldest and most aristocratic families of the south.

Her mother, who was a Miss Pendleton, is a daughter of the late Judge and Mrs. John T. Pendleton. Judge Pendleton, a pioneer citizen of Atlanta, was for 18 years judge of the superior court here. He was descended from the distinguished Pendleton family of Virginia, a family of celebrated jurists and clergymen.

Miss Stewart is a niece of the late Mrs. Charles T. Nunnally, and a cousin of Hugh and Charles Nunnally.

On her paternal side she is descended from General Stewart, of Vermont. She is an niece of Mrs. M. F. Cole, of Newnan; Mrs. W. H. Shaw, of Carrollton, and C. H. Stewart and W. J. Stewart, of Carrollton.

Miss Stewart was educated in Atlanta, at the North Avenue Presbyterian school and Washington seminary. She became interested in kindergarten work and after two years training taught one year.

Although she never made a formal debut, Miss Stewart has been one of the most popular girls of the younger social set. She is a member of the Atlanta Junior league and has taken part in that organization's various entertainments and charity work. She was instrumental in starting kindergarten work among children of the Atlanta Child's home, a work sponsored by the Junior league.

Mr. Lenhardt is the son of Mr. and Mrs. S. J. Lenhardt, of Carnesville. He graduated from the University of Georgia, where he was a member of the A. T. O. fraternity. During the world war he was first lieutenant in the 81st Field artillery and saw active service in France.

Since moving to Atlanta he has made a wide circle of friends and is one of the Bell house boys. He is a member of the Fifty club and the East Lake Country club.

He is engaged in the real estate business and is a member of the firm of Neal-Lenhardt company.

Even the normal foot needs the steadfast leather-spring support of The Answer Shoe

ARCH supports are not used in the "Answer" shoe—nothing except the natural leather. But the soles, uppers and counters are sewed together, through and through, by a method representing the most radical improvement in shoemaking for thirty-five years. This ties the parts together so that the arch of the shoe cannot possibly sag—yet it retains its flexibility.

Local Contribution To Playwrite Ranks Continues Unbroken

BY BESSIE S. STAFFORD.

Atlanta contributed two playwrights to Broadway last winter in the persons of Miss Lula Vollmer and Miss Nan Stephens. And, for this season, we can lay claim to Laurence Stallings, son of Mr. and Mrs. L. T. Stallings, of this city, whose "What Price Glory," written in collaboration with Maxwell Anderson, playing to the S. R. O. sign, is declared to be the most successful play to be presented at the Plymouth theater since John Barrymore appeared there in Richard III. many years gone by. New Yorkers, by the way, pronounce Stallings with a decided broad A sound, while here in the south we cling to the old-timey southern way of using the soft A.

It is a matter of no great surprise that Mr. Stallings has written the most talked of play in the metropolis, to those who have followed his life from the time he was born in Macon twenty-eight years ago. He has been a great student all of his life. His friends in Macon tell a story concerning his very remarkable memory, basing it upon the visit of the late President Theodore Roosevelt when his train stopped for ten minutes in Macon, so that he could make a speech from the rear platform. In the great crowd to greet him was a little boy 7 years old, who had begged so hard to be allowed to go hear this great American. He was so small that a kind gentleman held him on his shoulder. But not one word of the speech was missed by Laurence Stallings, for he went home and repeated it all to his parents. At 8 years old he had read Ben Hur and at 10 could readily quote any part of Sir Walter Scott's "Lady of the Lake."

Nicknamed "Gifty."

"Gifty" was his nickname at Wake Forest college, which he entered at Christmas time, the season of the year prompting the cognomen. He was graduated with an A. B. degree, and it was at this college, which is the alma mater of other famous men. It was here that he first met Mrs. Stallings, who was Miss Helen Purafoy Poteate, daughter of the president, Dr. William Poteate. She is Esma in his book, "Richard Plume," and the wonderful character, Penelope, is Mrs. L. T. Stallings, his mother. These two faithful and loving women, with his only sister, Mrs. Preston Witherspoon, of New York, made the fight with him to recover from those terrible wounds he received in Belleau Wood, when serving as captain of marines in the world war. She was his fiancee then, and waiting for him on this side of the Atlantic was this beautiful young woman, tall and stately, of the blonde type of loveliness, with radiant coloring, and possessing charming poise.

A friend writes from New York that between the acts of "What Price Glory" the audience rose en masse calling, "authors, authors" and "Stallings of the marines." They refused to appear, and Louis Wolheim, who takes the leading role, stepped upon the stage to say "the authors will not come forward, but they are up in the peanut gallery eating peanuts."

Alexander Wolcott, the dramatic critic of The New York Sun, tells the following story in connection with the production of "What Price Glory." The writers had in mind as they wrote that it should be played by Lionel Barrymore, J. M. Kerrigan and Irene Fenwick. But on the day when it was finished, in the hallway of the Brevoort, Stallings ran into Arthur Hopkins, who was standing at the bookstall, probably looking for a play. A certain Mr. Fixit, who was with Stallings at the time, mentioned the fact that Anderson and Stallings had just finished one.

"Send it to me," said Hopkins, in his garrulous way. "I will not," said Stallings, scornfully. "Why not?" Hopkins rattled on.

"Because you'd never read it, and you'd lose it and it would kick around your office for six months, the way 'The Old Soak' did."

"Send it to me tomorrow," said Hopkins, crossly, "and you'll have your answer by Monday."

The answer was "yes." He got the job.

Miss Carter's Trip.

Miss Katharine Carter's trip to California must have been one interesting experience after another, as she went out to make a visit and stayed almost long enough to become a native. She is at home again and has all sorts of delicious little tidbits to relate.

She witnessed the movie parade led by Jackie Coogan, looking very cute in a velvet suit and waving to everybody. All the shining stars were in it, riding in gorgeous motors. There were the Hal Roach stars, even including little coal-black Farina; the Mack Sennett girls in customary regalia; Bull Montana on a bull, and the really famous ones in their own private, wonderful cars. Then followed the directors, producers, et al. Enormous floats advertised each coming attraction for the Greater Movie season, and the Abe Lyman, Max Fisher and other recording orchestras furnished the music, which sounded like it was right off the record. A whole radio station was in the procession which was broadcasting and receiving messages all the time. People came from miles around for this parade, and a half holiday was declared in the city by the wise people who know the lure of the movies.

At a movie benefit she heard great big Jack Dempsey speak in his teeny-weeny voice.

Miss Carter experienced a real thrill standing shoulder to shoulder with Norma Talmadge and Eugene O'Brien, Nazimova, Harold Lloyd, May Murray, Conway Tearle, Viola Dana, Marilyn Miller, Jack Pickford and many others, and found them just as nice in the "real" as in the "reel."

"California people certainly know the meaning of pep, and everything there moves fast, including the traffic, which is very hard on us slow-moving southerners,' said Miss Carter.

The "Frivolity Shop."

"Frivolity Shop" was the charming name selected by Mrs. Garnett Andrews which she planned to open in Chattanooga this winter. She was forced to give up the idea, however, because her physicians advised against the responsibility owing to the condition of her health. The constantly increasing number of society women in America who are displaying unusual interest in serious undertakings is quite amazing. Every day we hear of some other prominent woman entering the business world. Mrs. Samuel C. Porter is the latest one to enter the field in Atlanta. She is in the east searching for genuine antiques, exclusive imported novelties and rare old china for her new shop which will open early in October on Peachtree street. Mrs. Porter has made a study of antiques and there is scarcely a woman in Atlanta who is better posted upon this subject. She has always been at the command of her intimate friends in giving gratis her valuable judgment, and advantages of exquisite taste, in the choice of antiques. It's a matter of general interest that others outside of that charmed circle of "intimate" can reap the benefit of her talent, for it is after all—a talent. Associated with her will be Miss May Patterson, whose artistic ability will be combined with that of Mrs. Porter's.

Atlanta Artist.

A former Atlantan, Thomas J. Debriage, has gained recognition as an artist in New York, his adopted home. He spent his summer vacation in the city with his mother, and while here painted several portraits of illustrious Georgians. The "First Lady of Our State," Mrs. Clifford Walker, is posed in a lovely white lace gown, against a soft gray background, the well directed light playing over her piquant face. Another of his portraits is of Miss Morna Michael, of Athens, who composed the brilliant and appealing poem, "We Shall Keep the Faith," in answer to Colonel McCrea's "We Shall Not Sleep." It was Miss Michael who organized Poppy Day, her patriotic idea expressive of loyal devotion to the ex-service men having swept all over America. This great humanitarian is lovingly called "The Poppy Lady." Her portrait pictures her in a gown of soft white satin, with a tulle scarf about her neck, and a cluster of blood-red poppies adorn her gown at the right. The background is a soft blue, just the right shade to complete the trio

Vashti Industrial School

Of the many institutions under the control of the Woman's Council of the Methodist Episcopal church, south, one of the most interesting is the Vashti Industrial school located at Thomasville. All of these institutions are doing splendid and far-reaching work, some of the foreigners in our midst some for delinquent girls, some for the large population employed in the cotton mills of the south, some for the negroes and some for the education of our mountain boys and girls. Each has its own peculiarly interested feature, but in the large industrial school in south Georgia, the work is preventive and the training goes into the future women and future mothers of this and other states.

Located in the section of Georgia which has a wonderful climate the year around, this school operates 12 months of the year. The value of the plant is $175,000, and splendid though it is, it is not yet adequate for the need, as applicants are constantly being turned away. During the year 1923-24, 139 girls were taken care of. They not only have the educational advantages of the institution, but they have the religious influence of the daily lives of a corps of trained, Christian women who are instructors there. Physicians of Thomasille have cooperated with all plans to keep the health of the students in fine shape. They have performed many tonsil and adenoid operations, given typhoid serum and taken other preventive measures, all without remuneration, the result of which has been that the entire year passed without an epidemic of even the simplest disease. In the summer time each girl is given a ten-day vacation, free from all school or domestic duties, and is allowed to go to a summer camp which has been recently donated by a neighbor. There the girls rest, relax and have recreation which fits them for the new school term.

Many Girl Students.

The student body is largely made up of girls whose former advantages have been meager and, in many cases, whose home training has been very poor. In addition to the patient normal training given the backward girls, all are taught the principles of cookery which they practice in the kitchens of the dormitories. All are taught valuable facts about sewing, laundrying, housecleaning, rug weaving, basketry, sightsinging and music.

After four years in this school home, girls go into the world well fitted to cope with any situation in which they may find themselves. The wonderful influence of this institution will really be known only in eternity.

MRS. WALLACE ROGERS.

Miss Charlotte Dye, superintendent, writes of some of this school's features:

"School opened September 1. The students who remained during the summer had such a fine vacation that they are happier than they ever have been at the beginning of a school term. They have gotten down to work in dead earnest and have the best spirit they have ever had since I have known them.

"We had some school for seven weeks in the summer, but the month of August was given over to making the girls happy and the seven members of the faculty who were present spared no pains to accomplish this end. They had hikes, picnics, parties, picture shows twice a week when the pictures were good.

One day they all hiked out to our beautiful camp, starting at dawn, carrying breakfast which they ate when half way there. The truck carried dinner and supper, and the girls hiked back, reaching home at 9 o'clock, tired but happy. Every girl had at least ten days at the camp some time during the summer.

"Our old dining hall has been torn down, and with our week-of-prayer money received in 1921, we are now erecting a new dining hall and kitchen. This will be in keeping with the other buildings and is much appreciated by the school."

FAT WOMAN TELLS WHAT SHE DID TO REDUCE

"For several years I weighed between 185 and 195 pounds, and was daily putting on flesh, although I tried every reducing pill, cream and remedy advertised. I would probably weigh 300 pounds to-day if I had not been fortunate enough to meet a French woman, who gave me a secret way she had found to get thin. With it I lost 75 pounds in a remarkably short time and greatly improved my health. I am glad to have the opportunity to make public the simple, easy directions I followed. If you, too, are burdened with ugly rolls of fat, suffer from high blood pressure and dizziness, you can almost immediately be relieved by doing just what I did and at the same time make yourself look ten years younger."

DIRECTIONS TO GET THIN

Get from your druggist a box of Sangrina and use it as per directions. At the same time get some of Dr. Folts' Soap (most druggists have it or can order it from the Scientific Research Laboratories, New York City). Make a good lather with this soap, apply it night and morning on special parts you want to reduce, such as double chins, ankles, bust, hips, etc.; let it remain a few minutes, then wash off. This French beauty secret is extensively used in Paris and New York by fashionable women and actresses and has been found remarkable to safely reduce in a very short time. It does not leave any wrinkles or flabby tissues, and of course is ABSOLUTELY HARMLESS. Try it and it will not be long before you will see a complete change in your figure. I know of many men and women who, in the very first week, have lost from 5 to 6 inches in measurement and several pounds in weight with Sangrina and Dr. Folts' Soap combined. It is the easiest, safest and most economical way to reduce. After you have attained desired measurement, you do not need to continue with Sangrina, but keep a box of Dr. Folts' Soap handy. Use it regularly once or twice a week, and even if you eat more than you should, you will not see any fat get on your figure. On sale at any of JACOBS' PHARMACIES, Cone's, Curtis' or Marshall & Pendergrast's Drug Stores.—(adv.)

Sure Way to Get Rid of Blackheads

There is one simple, safe and sure way that never fails to get rid of blackheads, that is to dissolve them.

To do this get two ounces of calonite power from any drug store—sprinkle a little on a hot, wet cloth—rub over the blackheads briskly—wash the parts and you will be surprised how the blackheads have disappeared. Big blackheads, little blackheads, no matter where they are, simply dissolve and disappear. Blackheads are a mixture of dust and dirt and secretions that form in the pores of the skin. The calonite powder and the water dissolve the blackheads so they wash right out, leaving the pores free and clean and in their natural condition.—(adv.)

Sunday School Class Is Entertained.

Mrs. Aubrey D. Walker entertained the "Live-Wire" class of the South Pryor Presbyterian church at her home Friday evening.

After a short business meeting a buffet supper was served.

The house was beautifully decorated in fall flowers. A pink and white color scheme was carried out in the table decorations, and a large silver vase filled with pink roses formed the centerpiece. Encircling this were pink, unshaded candles and pink rose buds filled with mints.

Those invited were: Mrs. Laura Sulzer, Mrs. Fay Jordan, Mrs. Marion Whitney, Miss Emma McArthur, Miss Farris, Miss Odessa Blackstock, Miss Annie Scoggin, Miss Ida Fuller and Miss Jennie Maude Scogin.

B. W. M. U. Fairburn Association.

Responding to a cordial invitation extended by Mrs. Homer H. Cook, superintendent of the W. M. U. of the Fairburn association, Mrs. W. M. Reid, Mrs. Laurence Turner, Mrs. L. D. Watson and Mrs. J. W. Wills, of Atlanta, motored to Union City on Tuesday, September 23, and attended the annual meeting at Shadnor Baptist church.

The meeting had opened the previous evening when Mrs. W. J. Neel, of Cartersville, president of the Georgia B. W. M. U., made the principal address, and the Fairburn Y. W. A.'s, under direction of Mrs. Woodall, associational leader, presented most effectively the exquisite pageant, "The Call of the Cross," written by Miss Catharine Bryan, of Shanghai, China.

Tuesday included not only reports of officers and committees, but addresses by the superintendent, Mrs. Homer Cook; Mrs. Idus Robertson, vice president of W. M. U. for the west central division; Mrs. J. Clinton Reese, of Fairburn, on mission study, and Dr. M. D. Collins, stewardship chairman for the Fairburn association.

Mrs. Cook made a strong appeal in her address that the women realize and appreciate their calling in Christ as "co-workers together with Him," bringing the completion of the 75-million campaign before them as a necessary part of their work for the next month.

"The word 'work' was an important one in the vocabulary of Jesus," Mrs. Cook said. "'My Father's business' was a fine phase of His teaching, and 'His business' calls for sound thinking, strenuous toil. Some one has said that the greatest word of the next one hundred years will be the word 'together.' It means co-operation in work and in purpose. In agreement of goals lies the strength of our association and that of southern Baptists. This takes us at once beyond the borders of our provincial plans, into the wider plans and broader fields of God's eternal purpose.

"Can we ever forget that high and holy calling of 5 years ago, when we made our solemn vows to our God for the 75-million campaign? We had months of preparation, information and earnest prayer for the guidance of our Lord. Do we not believe, yea know, that we were led by our Lord? Can we discount the sacred promise we then gave our God!

"We believed then, yea, we believe now, that that was the greatest hour in the history of our Baptist people. But have we not the confidence to believe there is a greater hour coming—the hour in which we preform the doing of it. Yes, there is a greater hour.

"We realize that it is not an easy task, and do we not believe God is testing His children to discover whether we are really in earnest about our great program for a lost world. After all the greatest call is not for money, but for men and women upon whom God can depend, and whom he can use.

"Southern Baptists will stand the test, and climb the mount of victory—because we are going to recognize our stewardship—realizing that 'we are laborers together with God'."

Missionary Workers.

Church women from two circuits held an interesting group meeting at Austell last Thursday, coming together for discussion of ways and means for better missionary endeavor.

From the Douglas circuit there were interested representatives from Bright Star, Midway and Douglasville. From Austell circuit came members of the W. M. S. from Mount Vernon, Trinity, Austell and Lithia. Mrs. J. C. White, secretary of the South Atlanta district, president.

Dr. Manget Speaks on Missions.

Dr. Fred Manget, medical missionary of Houchow, China, spoke before the Missionary Society of Trinity Methodist church recently. He brought a wonderful message about the life and work among the Chinese women, of the Christian schools for them in all lines of work, and how they are responding to the teachings. Some beautiful robes and pieces of fine handiwork were exhibited.

Dr. Belk conducted the devotional service and Mrs. Edwards, accompanied by Mrs. John Manget, sang a sacred solo.

Mrs. Garnett Quillian and her circle served tea during a pleasant social hour. MRS. S. G. HUNTER.

Atlanta, Ga.

Briefly Told.

Miss Blanche Bradley, a Gtorgia Baptist missionary who has been home on a furlough because of illness, has fully recovered and sailed for China September 11 to take up her work again in Hwanghsien, where she is an important factor in the hospital under the direction of the well-beloved medical missionary, Dr. T. W. Ayers.

It was a fortunate circumstance for the W. M. S. of the Druid Hills Baptist church that it was able to have Dr. Ayers' address last Thursday afternoon at the meeting in observance of the state mission program. Dr. Ayers is at home on furlough and is making headqurters at Anniston, Ala., but doing a great deal of inspirational speaking in various places.

September, which has been designated by Georgia Baptists as "Christian Index month," is rapidly passing, and naturally, all interested are inquiring: "How goes the campaign for 35,000 new subscribers?" Helping in the task of putting the Baptist organ into every Baptist home is worthy of everyone who labors and prays for the growth of the kingdom.

Cheering news comes from the Mary P. Willingham school, located at Blue Ridge, owned and conducted by the Baptist W. M. U. Mrs. A. B. Greene, wife of the president, writes: "It was an attractive sight to see the pupils—over 100 of them—march in and fill up one side of the chapel at the public opening September 4."

It would be difficult to resist making announcement in this column that the W. M. S. of the First Baptist church of La Grange conducted last year 32 mission study classes and qualified for 52 seals. It easily follows that this society has increased in membership from 160 to 225 during the year.

Woman's Missionary Society Meeting.

The ladies of the Woman's Missionary society of the Third Baptist church met at the home of Mrs. C. A. Harwell, 150 West Merritts avenue, and observed September 25 as day of prayer for state missions. The meeting was opened by the singing of a hymn, with Mrs. B. Benson as pianist; prayer by Mr. C. A. Ridley, president. Mrs. C. S. Morris stated the object of the meeting, then followed reading and discussion of various papers pertaining to the work, followed by chain of prayer.

The devotional was led by Mrs. B. Benson, followed by special song by Mrs. C. A. Harwell and Mrs. J. G. Morris. Mrs. Ridley made a splendid talk on "Missions," followed by the fourth district secretary, Mrs. J. W. Smith, making urgent appeal for more activity in the classes being taught on missions, also dismissing the meeting with prayer.

of patriotic colors, red, white and blue, and to bring out her soft blonde hair and pretty blue eyes. It is to hang in the home of Mrs. W. M. Nichols, sister of Miss Michael, who resides in Decatur.

"St. Peter" is the title of a wonderful old painting 24½ by 19½ inches, belonging to Miss A. W. Washington, who resides on Greenwood avenue. It is believed by Mr. Delbridge to be a murilla belonging to the Spanish school, although every trace of the artist's name is erased. Miss Washington, the owner, is a great-great niece of the father of our country, and is a descendant of Mark Washington. A real mystery story is interwoven with the Atlanta woman's ownership of this art treasure. It seems that it was bequeathed to her by her adopted grandmother into whose possession it fell about 60 years ago. On a cold stormy night during the civil war, a carriage drove up to her grandmother's home in Baton Rouge, La., the driver coming inside to request a night's shelter for the gentleman and his wife occupying the carriage. They were richly attired, though travel-stained and weary, their baggage consisting of a small trunk, a traveling bag and a package of which they seemed specially careful. They appeared well-bred, refined people and expressed appreciation for their refreshment and comfortable room. They stated their intention to proceed on their journey the following day, and retired seemingly for the night. They remained in their room only a few hours, when the same driver who had brought them called for an interview with the gentleman, and after a few hurried words the three of them hastily departed, calling only a moment to offer thanks or remuneration for kindness received and asking permission to leave a portion of their baggage to be called for within a stated time or, if not, Miss Washington's grandmother would make such use of their belongings as seemed best to her. The travelers were never heard from again. The trunk contained fine undergarments of silk and linen, laced and embroidered, but no marks of identification. The package on which were many wrappings to protect it from injury contained only the oil painting.

"Rose Marie" Debut.

Rose-Marie has made its debut on Broadway with Miss Mary Ellis as lovely Rose-Marie. It is a magnificent musical comedy in two acts and ten scenes, which is singing merrily on its triumphant way at the Imperial theater. Miss Ellis is the very talented young girl who was with the Metropolitan Opera company for several seasons. She possesses a soprano voice of wonderful quality, so that Broadway is expecting great things of this gifted girl who is well known in Atlanta. She comes from a family of song-birds, for she is a niece of Mrs. Benjamin Elsas. Rose-Marie is a play staged with handsome sets and marvelous draperies. The costumes are colorful, artistic and dazzlingly beautiful. Particularly entrancing to the feminine part of the audience is the bridal gown Miss Ellis wears in the second act, fashioned of satin and row after row of real lace on the bouffant skirt. Ornamenting the right side of the bodice is a garland of orange blossoms which fastens to her arm with a bracelet-like effect of the blossoms.

New Era Study Club Meeting.

The New Era Study club held its regular meeting on Wednesday, September 25, at the home of Mrs. J. B. Brooks in Inman Park. Mrs. L. O. Turner, the newly-elected president, called the meeting to order for business, after which Mrs. Brooks served a delicious lunch. The hostess was assisted by her daughter, Mrs. Eugene Brooks, and Mrs. Burns Brooks. A color scheme of autumn shades was carried out in every detail.

"Pilgrimages Around Boston" was the subject of papers by Mrs. R. J. Pritchett, Mrs. Tim Thornton and Mrs. F. M. Akers, with Mrs. Quillian as leader. Beautiful vocal selections were rendered by Mrs. L. E. Rogers Mrs. L. T. Patillo. The membership was well represented.

Miss Skelton, of Hartwell, Miss Nelson, Mrs. C. A. Alexander and Mrs. L. T. Pattillo were guests of the hostess.

The next meeting will be with Mrs. Garnett Quillian on October 8.

Baptist Volunteers Of State To Attend Meeting at Macon

Macon, Ga., September 25.—(Special.)—More than 300 delegates are expected here November 7-9 to attend the state convention of the Georgia Baptist volunteer band at the Vineville Baptist church.

Volunteers are students of Georgia Baptist schools and colleges who have indicated a desire to go abroad for missionary service. They are from Shorter college, Bessie Tift college, Mercer university and 12 prep schools of the state.

According to the program announced by President Guy Welch, of the volunteer band, those to appear on the program will be Dr. and Mrs. W. H. Clarke, returned missionaries of Japan; Rev. and Mrs. Eph Whisenhunt, China; Dr. T. W. Ayres, China; Miss Lillian Fulghum, Japan; Dr. W. O. Carver, of the Southern Baptist seminary, Louisville; Miss M. Poteat, China; Dr. Aquila Chamlee, president of Bessie Tift college, and Dr. H. M. Fugate, of Macon.

Women's Relief Fund Is Distressingly Low.

"Chapters of the Georgia division have you contributed your part toward the relief fund for needy Confederate women?" asks Mrs. R. M. McMaster, of Waynesboro, chairman for the Georgia division of the "Mrs. Norman V. Randolph Relief Fund." "To date only 23 chapters in the division have contributed to the most pathetic cause for which our organization is called to work. Only $50 has been contributed by our whole great division and the treasurer-general is on record as saying to the general U. D. C., "the relief fund is low—only just enough in the treasury to make August payments." Mrs. Julia Norris, general U. D. C. chairman of the fund, says "take your minutes, turn to page 191 and you will find pledges made at Washington for all divisions. Has your division paid its quota of $1 per chapter?"

Georgia has not. Up to August, Georgia has paid $50, Mrs. McMaster writes. Old, feeble, helpless, suffering today. Yesterday they gave of their youth and strength and energy to the south, as truly, as absolutely as the men who wore gray uniforms. And only $1—one little dollar—is asked for them from each group of splendid Georgia women—nearly every one of whom wears a string of beads costing more than that. There isn't a chapter in the state that couldn't afford $10' for such a cause for the few years these women will still be with us.

Mrs. McMaster's committee includes Mrs. G. A. Ware, Miss Ethel Dallis Hall, Mrs. Bartow Willingham, Miss Helen Long, Mrs. W. W. Hillis, Mrs. G. M. Mitchell, Mrs. George Allen.

Annual Meeting To Be Held at Mrs. Mayson's.

"The Good Friends" of old Walker Street church will hold their annual meeting Tuesday, September 30, at 3 o'clock, at the home of Mrs. James L. Mayson, 274 Ponce de Leon avenue. Those who have previously enrolled and all former members are invited to be present.

Federal Council of Churches Will Meet Here in December

Atlanta will be the hub of religious activity in America during the week of December 3-9, when the Federal Council of American Churches will hold quadrennial meeting here, bringing together 400 representatives of 30 of the leading Protestant denominations of the United States and Canada, along with many distinguished religious leaders from Europe and Asia.

This great body of religious leaders will come to Atlanta as the result of an invitation extended by the local Committee on Church Cooperation. The committee is making arrangements for the visitors through a subcommittee headed by Richard Orme Flinn, pastor of North Avenue Presbyterian church.

This will be the first time the federal council has ever met in the south, previous meetings having been held in the large eastern cities. This fact is considered of peculiar significance by leaders in southern religious activity and all reports indicate that the visitors will be welcomed by the attendance of practically every outstanding leader in the denominations to be represented.

Sessions of the council, it has been announced, will be held in the Central Presbyterian church, and will be open to the public. Sessions will be devoted largely to hearing reports for the past four years and to discussion and formulation of plans for the future. A wide range of vitally-interesting subjects will be discussed by speakers of international fame.

The opening address will be delivered by Dr. Robert E Speer, of New York, president of the Federal council, who will preside throughout the meeting.

The Federal Council of American Churches is an association representing the majority of the great Protestant bodies of America. Its interests are world-wide, and much of its activity is devoted to the welfare of the objects sought by the denominations in common. Affiliation of all Christian forces is its prime object, and to this end its membership devotes attention to both local and general fields.

Dandruffy Heads Become Hairless

If you want plenty of thick, beautiful, glossy, silky hair, do by all means get rid of dandruff, for it will starve your hair and ruin it if you don't.

It doesn't do much good to try to brush or wash it out. The only sure way to get rid of dandruff is to dissolve it, then you destroy it entirely. To do this, get about four ounces of ordinary liquid arvon; apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the finger tips.

By morning, most if not all, of your dandruff will be gone, and two or three more applications will completely dissolve and entirely destroy every single sign and trace of it.

You will find, too, that all itching and digging of the scalp will stop, and your hair will look and feel a hundred times better. You can get liquid arvon at any drug store. Four ounces is all you will need, no matter how much dandruff you have. This simple remedy never fails.—(adv.)

Young Girl Afraid To Eat Anything

Girl's Stomach in Bad Shape. Couldn't Eat.

"I was afraid to eat anything because I always had trouble with my stomach. Was also troubled for three years with constipation. After taking less than one bottle Adlerika (intestinal antiseptic) I can eat anything and feel fine." (Signed) Ardenia Howard.

Intestinal Antiseptic.

There is now offered to the public a liquid preparation having the DOUBLE action of an intestinal antiseptic and a complete system cleanser. This preparation, known as Adlerika, acts as follows:

It tends to eliminate or destroy harmful germs and colon bacilli in the intestinal canal, thus guarding against appendicitis and other diseases having their start here.

It cleans out BOTH upper and lower bowel and removes foul matter which poisoned the system for months. It brings out all gases, thus immediately relieving pressure on the heart. It is astonishing the great amount of poisonous matter Adlerika draws from the intestinal canal—matter you never thought was in your system. Try it right after a natural movement and notice how much MORE foul matter it brings out which was poisoning you. In slight disorders, such as occasional constipation, sour stomach, gas on the stomach or sick headache, one spoonful Adlerika ALWAYS brings relief. A longer treatment, however, is necessary in cases of obstinate constipation and long standing stomach trouble, preferably under direction of your physician.

Reports from Physicians.

"I have found nothing in my 50 years' practice to excel Adlerika." (Signed) Dr. James Weaver.

"I congratulate you on the good effect from Adlerika since I prescribed it." (Signed) Dr. L. Langiois.

"I use Adlerika in all bowel cases. Some require only one dose." (Signed) Dr. F. M. P. (Name withheld by request).

"Adlerika is the best in my entire 37 years' experience." (Signed) Dr. G. Eggers.

"Cannot describe awful IMPURITIES eliminated from my system (by Adlerika). Feel better than for 20 years." (Signed) J. E. Puckett.

Adlerika is a big surprise to people who have used only ordinary bowel and stomach medicines, because of its quick, pleasant and COMPLETE action. It is sold by leading druggists everywhere.

PERRYSBURG, OHIO—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound because I suffered with pains in my sides all the time. I can't remember just how long I suffered but it was for some time. One day I was talking with a neighbor and I told her how I was feeling and she said she had been just like I was with pains and nervous troubles and she took the Vegetable Compound and it helped her. So then I went and got some and I certainly recommend it for it is good. Whenever I see a woman who is sick I try to get her to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. ADA FRICK, R. The "Magic" of the Laundry

Long ago, when folks rode bicycles and used oil lamps, people used to believe that the laundries had a sort of "magic" for cleaning clothes.

But now they know that the "magic" of the laundry is nothing less than pure rainsoft water and mild white soap. Those are the laundry's "magic"—those and repeated rinsings in clear water and infinite care in handling.

The laundry's methods are the same that your mother and grandmother knew, only we systematized them and refined them—replaced guesswork with certainty, and substituted modern methods for the clothes-wrecking washboard, wringer, and clothes-line.

Today the laundry is ready to do all of your washing; do it satisfactorily, economically, and under the most sanitary conditions.

Just phone your laundry to call for your family wash.

"Have Faith in Georgia" To Be Keynote of Women's Convention

"Have Faith in Georgia" is to be the keynote of the convention of the Georgia Federation of Women's Clubs to be held in Atlanta from November 11 to 14, according to announcement made at the state executive board meeting of the federation held at the Atlanta Woman's club on Thursday. That faith in Georgia is to be interpreted in broad and liberal terms of pride in American citizenship was emphasized through the announcement that the opening session of the convention will take the form of an Armistice day celebration to be conducted jointly by the federation and the American Legion.

The opening session will be held at the Baptist Tabernacle on Tuesday evening, November 11, at 7:45 o'clock, and the speaker of the occasion will be brought to Atlanta and presented through the committee appointed by the American Legion to work with Mrs. T. T. Stevens, president of the Atlanta Federation of Women's Clubs, and her committee from the Atlanta federation, which will be hostess to the state convention.

American Legion Gift.

Further recognition from the American Legion of the federation's Americanization work came as a surprise at this meeting. It was tendered in the form of the gift of a $2,000 perpetual scholarship from the Argonne post of the legion to Tallulah Falls school. The scholarship is to be for boys without other resources for obtaining an education.

This gift will go to Tallulah Falls school through the Atlanta Federation of Women's Clubs and places that organization over the top in its drive for $20,000 for the school. Statement was made from the legion that it was given in appreciation of Mrs. B. M. Boykin and Mrs. Arthur Hazzard, who each year serve as chairman and treasurer of the legion's poppy day sale and is appreciation of the fine work carried forward by the Atlanta Federation of Women's Clubs in training at the school future citizens of Georgia. The Argonne post scholarship at Tallulah Falls school was declared a part of the Americanization program being put forward by the American Legion in accepting this gift to the school. Mrs. John King Ottley, president of the board of trustees, called attention to the fact that the scholarship is the second to be given in recognition of the school's citizenship training, as the school is already the beneficiary of a scholarship given by the Georgia Society of Colonial Dames as a part of its Americanization work.

Mrs. Brenner Presides.

Mrs. A. H. Brenner, first vice president of the Georgia federation, presided at the board meeting in the absence of Mrs. Archibald P. Brantley, president, who is in New York.

Officers and members of the board in attendance were Mrs. Brenner, Mrs. S. V. Sanford, second vice president; Mrs. Oscar McKenzie, recording secretary; Mrs. B. M. Boykin, corresponding secretary; Miss Rosa Woodberry, parliamentarian; Mrs. Rix Stafford, editor; Mrs. Alonzo Richardson, general federation director for Georgia; Mrs. Henry M. Bird, Mrs. R. A. Heinsohn, Mrs. Oscar Peeples, Mrs. Joseph Vason, Mrs. E. Downer Dimmock, Mrs. W. F. Wilhoit, Miss Lucile Akin, district presidents; Mrs. Z. I. Fitzpatrick, Mrs. John King Ottley, Mrs. G. A. Johns, Mrs. E. H. Goodhart, Mrs. C. J. Haden, Miss Alice Baxter, Mrs. John H. Quinn, Mrs. Clifford Walker, Mrs. Felton Jones, Mrs. Walton Purdom, Mrs. R. K. Rambo, Mrs. G. P. Folks, Mrs. Howard H. McCall, Mrs. Norman Sharp, Mrs. J. E. McElroy, Mrs. D. S. Walraven, Mrs. W. R. Johnston, Mrs. T. T. Stevens, Mrs. Lamar C. Rucker, Mrs. Arthur Hazzard, Mrs. J. Lindsay Johnson, Mrs. S. M. Inman, Mrs. W. H. Griffin, Mrs. Price Gilbert, Mrs. McCord Roberts.

Presentation of plans for the approaching convention occupied first place in the order of business during the morning session and as outlined by Mrs. S. V. Sanford, second vice president and program chairman, these plans provide for three brilliant evening sessions and two day sessions. The hostess organization will entertain the entire body of delegates at luncheon each day at the Atlanta Biltmore hotel, headquarters for the convention, and the first social occasion will be a reception to be given by the Atlanta Woman's club on Tuesday afternoon, November 11, from 5 to 7 o'clock.

Proposed changes in the constitution and by-laws prove of prime interest and as finally formulated provide for offering to the convention substitute rules which will call for biennial conventions and reduction of the number of yearly board meetings to two, each meeting to last two days instead of one as at present. The changes provide for a biennial council patterned after the general federation's council and for holding both council and convention in the spring instead of in the fall as is now done.

Mrs. Clifford Walker Speaks.

Mrs. Clifford Walker was welcomed both as a member of the board and as the wife of Georgia's governor. In reporting as chairman of cooperation with the Parent-Teacher association, Mrs. Walker stressed the value of the work being done at Tallulah Falls school and said: "I am sending out letters to leaders in the P.-T. A. asking them to cooperate with the club committee in raising money for the school, emphasizing the cordial attitude of the clubs toward the program of the P.-T. A. for the pre-school child and calling for reciprocal action in this heroic effort. Since it advances the cause of education materially in the state, it is of double interest to educational forces and calls for active sympathy wherever it can possibly be given."

Mrs. R. K. Rambo, chairman of the department of public welfare, was an outstanding speaker of the afternoon session, placing before the board a plan to call together for conference the public welfare departments of the various state organizations in order to map out plans by which each organization may take over the divisions of work in public welfare most suited to their lines of activity. Mrs. Rambo called attention to the frequent overlapping now met with in public welfare work and declared such a conference would facilitate the administration of many important organizations which feature public welfare undertakings. Hearty commendation of the plan was given by the board.

Mrs. Alonzo Richardson addressed the board both as director for Georgia in the general federation and as chairman of the children's home commission of Georgia. In her capacity as director she announced the creation of a new department in the general federation work, the department of the home, with Mrs. Maggie Berry, of Bryan, Texas, as chairman. Mrs. Richardson spoke enthusiastically of the biennial in Los Angeles and declared that Mrs. Thomas G. Winter had summed up the spirit of federation work when she told the delegates to the biennial that it is a duty to "think nationally and interpret locally."

Forestry protection was brought to the attention of the board by Miss Alice Baxter, and a deeper respect for greater deference to the flag urged by Mrs. Samuel Inman.

Large plans for the work of the junior membership committee were declared ready to put into action by Mrs. Norman Sharp, and the Ella F. White endowment fund stressed by Mrs. Fitzpatrick.

Telegrams went from the board to Mrs. John Sherman, president of the general federation, inviting her to attend the convention in November, and to Mrs. J. E. Hays, past president of the Georgia federation, who is in Washington attending a meeting of the executive committee of the general federation in her capacity as an officer. Most affectionate greetings were sent from the board to Mrs. Brantley in response to a message of interest from her.

Luncheon was featured by the report of the board of trustees of Tallulah Falls school, as given by Mrs. John King Ottley, Mrs. Price Gilbert, Mrs. T. T. Stevens and Mrs. Z. I. Fitzpatrick and by addresses from Mrs. Brenner and Mrs. Lamar Rucker on the club institute conducted at the University of Georgia in July. Enthusiastic praise of Mrs. Rucker and Mrs. Sanford marked Mrs. Brenner's talk.

Albany Woman's Club Plans Clubhouse in Near Future

With the return to prosperity to south Georgia, the outlook for the Woman's club is extremely encouraging. There are many new names being added to the membership already, and the fact that the club is going to put over the biggest thing in its history has inspired old and new members to greater effort. Past President Mrs. George A. McArthur inaugurated the movement for a club home during her administration, and the time is undoubtedly ripe now to push this movement on to success. The club has outgrown the quarters in the municipal auditorium, and for sometime has been handicappel for lack of facilities. A club house with an auditorium, reading rooms, studios, kitchen and living quarters for hostess, etc., is greatly needed, and with the combined efforts of the loyal membership and other civic organizations the Albany Woman's club will, before many realize it, be at home in her own home.

Activities Outlined.

The outline of activities for the coming club year is inspiring. On the last Friday in September a get-together reception will be given by the new executive board and the hospitality committee, under the chairmanship of Mrs. Frank Jefferson, for the membership of the club, and the heads of other civic organizations, and for the teachers in the Albany schools, together with others who are interested in the club and its ambition.

The program of October is in the hands of the health committee, under the able supervision of Mrs. J. M. Patterson, who has had extensive experience in club work in her former home, Chicago. Among other things, a moving picture entitled "Working for Dear Life," will be shown, portraying the need of caring for the human machine as well as automobiles, and explaining how to recognize a knock in the human engine as clearly as one in a treasured car. A lecture and demonstration on "How to Normalize Your Weight" will be given also.

Mrs. E. H. Kalmon is the chairman of the committee on American citizenship, and has charge of the program for November. A patriotic pageant celebrating Armistice day, has been planned by Mrs. Kalmon.

In December, the library extension committee, with Mrs. D. H. Redfearn as chairman, will recognize book week. A survey of who is reading in Albany and what they are reading will be taken. A talk on better books in the home has been planned.

Mrs. David Brown, beloved leader of the study circle of the Woman's club, has planned a charming art exhibit to be held in January. It is planned to use one of the exhibits available at federation headquarters and with this to use some of the beautiful art objects that are owned locally, lovely old laces, rare pieces of ivory, some wonderful bits of pottery and probably some period furniture.

Mhe. Walter Beckham, the chairman of domestic science, and who fits the place like a buttonhole fits a button, is bubbling over with plans for her committee. During Better Homes week this committee will show everybody how it ought to be done, and a course in interior decorating with probably an interesting exhibit, and an instructive lecture is part of Mrs. Beckham's program. Already this committee is working on a class in millinery, to be given very soon.

Music Committee.

The music committee is planning something really fine. The chairmanship is in the hands of Mrs. A. D. Galt, whose name means music to anyone who knows her, and she has planned a little grand opera for the March program. In March everyone's mind turns to music, with whispers of Atlanta grand opera tuning up, and little grand opera to be presented by the music committee, with Mrs. Galt in charge will be a rare treat.

The civics committee has as its chairman a newcomer into the club, and one who has already brought with her the inspiration of her splendid initiative and energy. Mrs. Clyde B. Pooser, civics chairman, has already begun the work of her committee by beautifying the bare and ugly spots around the business district by growing grass and flowers and shrubbery. These, planted by Mrs. Pooser, have flourished and borne fruit—a happy portent of the work that will be done by this committee. In April the civics committee plans to have a flower and vegetable pageant, in cooperation with the county agent, J. Irvin Davis.

Mrs. I. J. Hofmayer, the active and efficient chairman of education and child welfare, has planned a better baby show for her committee's program in May. Mrs. Hofmayer has had extensive experience in a good many lines of club work, and she and her committee can be counted on to round out the year's work with a charming program in May.

Each committee of the Woman's club desires, of course, to further the interests of the local organization and those of the general federation, but each committee and each individual member also realizes the responsibility of the community at large. If the efforts of the club this year succeed in making our community a better, a more beautiful, a healthier, a more intelligent place to live in, the year will not be wasted.—Albany Herald.

The Duluth Civic Improvement club held its regular monthly meeting at the home of Mrs. Ezrah Wright. Her lovely home was decorated with a profusion of the loveliest garden flowers. The meeting was called to order by the president, Mrs. H. L. Strickland. Visitors and new members were introduced and welcomed into the club.

Reports from chairmen of the various committees show wonderful improvement in all departments. Mrs. Alice Strickland, of the department of forestry, read a most interesting article urging the necessity of preserving our forests. Department of civics, Mrs. J. Heard Summerour, chairman, asked that every man, woman and child cooperate with it in having a "clean-up" week, thus adding to the health and beauty of the town.

Following the business meeting, a very interesting program was rendered, with Mrs. D. W. Wilson in charge. Readings on "Home and School Improvement" were given by Mrs. Neal, Mrs. Carl Bagwell, and Miss Lenoir Summerour; songs by Frank Reese, Evrett Bagwell, George Bennett and Frank Madison, accompanied by Mrs. Harrison Summerour, after which Mrs. Calvin Parsons gave a reading. A delicious ice course was served by the hostess assisted by her nieces, Misses Edith and Eva Gilbert, of Lawrenceville.

Among the out-of-town visitors were Mrs. M. Grennell, president of the Clearwater Civic club, who gave a most interesting talk on some of the work done by her club; Mrs. Gilbert and daughters, of Lawrenceville, Mrs. Ida Little, Miss Lenoir Summerour, Frank Reese, Evrett Bagwell, Frank Madison and George Bennett.

The club adjourned to meet the first Thursday in October at the home of Mrs. Charlie Summerour, the secretary. Thursday Club Holds Meeting.

The Thursday club, of Tallapoosa, Ga., held its first fall meeting September 4 in the attractively furnished new club rooms, Mrs. C. W. Howell presiding. At the conclusion of an interesting meeting, during which important business was transacted, a reception was tendered the new officers by the retiring president, Mrs. L. C. Waldrop. The officers for the ensuing year are: Mrs. C. W. Howell, president; Mrs. S. S. Rambo, first vice president; Mrs. J. W. Hildebrand, second vice president; Mrs. W. H. Malone, secretary; Mrs. A. V. Howe, treasurer; Mrs. L. C. Waldrop, press chairman.

The committee on friendly relations for ex-service men sends a box of delicious home-made cookies once a month to ward 3, United States hospital, Augusta, Ga. Mrs. A. V. Howe is the efficient chairman of this committee.

A considerable sum was added to the club's bank account by putting on "Rosetime," a very creditable performance.

The club cooperated with the Tallapoosa High school in the erection of an indoor basketball court.

Mesdames E. S. Kytle and C. E. Pearce were hostesses to the club at a most enjoyable social meeting September 18.

Rocky Creek Club Gives Fine Program.

The Rocky Creek Woman's club met September 18 at the home of Mrs. Albert Dorton with Mrs. T. D. Weems joint hostess.

The living room and halls were beautifully decorated with French baskets filled with vari-colored garden flowers.

Mrs. J. H. Sanders, president of the club, presided at the meeting. The program included song by club, prayer by Mrs. R. C. Walker. Mrs. Rufus Greer gave an instructive talk on P.-T. A. work, stressing the importance of parents, teachers and children cooperating.

Mrs. Wessie Padgett rendered a group of vocal selections. All members were present. The guests included Mrs. R. C. Walker and Mrs. Robert Strickland, of McDonough; Mrs. D. M. Weems, Mrs. Jason Weems and Miss Eva Weems, of Luella.

At the conclusion of the program a delicious salad course was served.

Tenth District President Writes on Club Activities

Photograph by Mathewson & Price.

Mrs. W. F. Wilhoit, of Warrenton, president of the tenth district of the Georgia Federation of Women's Clubs, and chairman of publicity for the Warrenton Woman's club. She is a trained club woman and is preparing a very active program of work for her district in which she is highly esteemed and very popular.

Mrs. W. F. Wilhoit, president of the tenth district, Georgia Federation of Women's Clubs, writes interestingly of the Tallulah Falls birthday party given recently by the Warrenton Woman's Club. She writes as follows:

On the spacious lawn of the beautiful colonial home of Mrs. M. L. Felts the Warrenton Woman's club complimented the Tallulah Falls school with a birthday party. This party occurred last Friday and was the initial movement of the fall activities of the club. In response to invitations previously sent out a large number of friends and club members were present. A receptacle was placed near the entrance to the grounds and each guest was requested to drop into it a penny for each year she had experienced. Many who appeared youthful and attractive in appearance proved by the count of the money to be octogenarians and some even centenarians. They were, however, a wonderfully good looking company of "old ladies." Two punch bowls were artistically arranged from which Misses Lyora Smith, Mary Lou McGregor, Louise Braswell, Katherine Farmer, Mary Felts and Evelyn Pilcher dispersed refreshing nectar. The guests were called to order and the following program was rendered: History of the School, Mrs. W. S. Norton chorus "Tallulah School" (written by one of the members of the club and sung to the tune of "My Maryland."

Legend of Lovers' Leap.

The Legend of Lovers' Leap (selected from Lucian Knight's "Memorials and Legends;" Mrs. M. L. Felts song, "Georgia Land;" Miss Dorothy Anchor's appeal for Tallulah school, Mrs. W. F. Wilhoit.

Mrs. L. P. Jarnagin had obtained from the school kodak pictures of the buildings and the surrounding scenery. These were numbered and were sold for ten cents each. After the sale of the pictures a beautifully decorated old fashoned pound cake—the birthday cake—was displayed by Mrs. C. H. Evans, who announced that fac-similes of the numbers on the pictures had been placed on slips of paper and put in a box and that an number would be drawn and the number on the picture corresponding with it would draw the cake. Number 84 was drawn and Mrs. G. R. Maner proved to be winner of the cake.

A unique game was then enjoyed under the direction of Mrs. E.B. Farmer, who called the names of those present placing them on opposite sides of the room as if she intended having an old fashioned "Spelling Bee." When they were all placed she remarked that we, too, had mountains in our community, mountains of flesh, and then it was seen that one side was made up of women distinctly "embonpoint," while the other side was composed of their "skinny sisters. Those on the skinny side were given cards on which had been painted little log cabins, representing the school, with pencils attached.

The "Fats" were given blank cards with no pencils. Mrs. Farmer explained that the lean ones were pupils of the Tallulah Falls school and could read and write and count. The others were not pupils consequently they could neither read nor write. The pupils were to seek partners from the opposite side, write, their names for them and take them for a three minute promenade through the flower garden. Those present entered heartily and hilariously into every detail of the arrangements and when the final count was made thirty-five dollars had been raised for the school.

Tallulah School.

We're coming to thy rescue now,
Tallulah School, Tallulah School.
We'll place the laurel on thy brow,
Tallulah School, Tallulah School.
We'll give the message of thy need,
We'll ask our friends to hear and heed,
And hearing do the noble deed,
Tallulah School, Tallulah School.

Thy little children's voices call,
Tallulah School, Tallulah School.
For ignorance a blinding wall.
Tallulah School, Tallulah School.
The call is just and righteous, too,
Advantages for them are few,
And knowledge is but their just due,
Tallulah School, Tallulah School,

Those minds among the mountains grand,
Tallulah School, Tallulah School.
Are purest Anglo-Saxon brand,
Tallulah School, Tallulah School.
Shut in by mountains' towering walls,
Close by Tallulah's thundering falls.
We'll wrest them nom from ignorance thralls.
Tallulah School, Tallulah School.

And now we'll heed the children's call,
Tallulah School, Tallulah School.
We'll give a little of our all
Tallulah School, Tallulah School.
Our consciences will then be clear,
Relief will come to hearts so drear
When we have helped the children dear,
Tallulah School, Tallulah School.

Tallulah Falls Trustees Will Erect Hostess House at School

An outstanding feature of especial interest in the meeting of Tallulah Falls trustees was the idea suggested by Mrs. Bolling Jones, chairman of memorials, and presented by Mrs. Fitzpatrick in the absence of Mrs. Jones—that the trustees of the school should erect a guest house to be known as the "Trustee Guest House," and a bronze tablet placed in it bearing the name of each of the forty-two trustees who constitute the board at this time.

Acceptance of Suggestion.

The acceptance of this suggestion was made by Mrs. Price Gilbert and seconded by Mrs. McCall and was carried with great enthusiasm, a number of trustees present rising to pledge a hundred dollars for that purpose.

Several of the trustees availed themselves of this opportunity to express their appreciation and admiration of the faithful, untiring and brilliant leadership of the president of the board and their pride at having their names inscribed on a tablet under that of Mrs. John K. Ottley, president of the board.

Mrs. Z. I. Fitzpatrick made the report from the benefit performance of "Sun Up" given in Chicago in June. There were many interesting features of her experience, but perhaps the most vital a statement held for the first announcement to come to the board of trustees that the net amount made after all the expenses in Chicago were paid was $2,309.91. This brought a round of applause and then Mrs. Boykin and Mrs. Stevens gave delightful account of the cordial and generous response of the various organizations in Chicago who had been notified by the Atlanta branches, of the distinguished audience, including governors of three states, and the gorgeous roses sent by the Chicago florists.

Brilliant Publicity.

Mrs. Willard Patterson, whose brilliant publicity work was emphasized by all the other ladies in their talks, gave a thrilling account of how, after securing the approval and letters from Mrs. Margaret Haley, president of the Federated Teachers in Chicago (6,000 in number), who gave the heartiest indorsement of "Sun Up" as a play and the work of the Georgia federation at Tallulah as sublime, she rushed across Chicago to get these letters into print the very day of the performance.

However, she, most modestly, insists that the great success of the benefit came from the heart appeal of the cause, the story of the pathetic mountain children and thinks her most successful coup was when she carried the little Tallulah school girl, Grace Traylor, to the offices of The Chicago Tribune and Herald-Examiner and they listened to the child's story and printed her picture—"A Little Child Shall Lead Thee."

The whole meeting was a veritable love feast of success and enthusiasm and must bring great encouragement to the visitors from the other districts who were the guests of the trustees.

Officers Elected.

Mrs. John King Ottley was re-elected president of the board of trustees of the Tallulah Falls school Wednesday evening at the close of the dinner given by the members of the board from Atlanta in honor of the out-of-town members at the Atlanta Woman's club. Dinner was served in the beautiful banquet hall at tables decorated with autumn flowers effectively arranged in silver baskets with silver candelabra holding unshaded candles.

Mrs. Ottley's term of office will be for two years, and is her second term. Mrs. S. B. C. Morgan, of Savannah, is honorary president.

The other officers elected were: First vice president, Mrs. Walter Douglas Lamar, Macon; second vice president, Mrs. Z. I. Fitzpatrick, of Madison; third vice president, Mrs. R. A. Heinsohn, Sylvester; secretary, Mrs. Price Gilbert; treasurer, Mrs. T. T. Stevens; parliamentarian, Miss Rosa Woodberry.

Montezuma Woman's Club Holds Meeting In Club House

The Montezuma Woman's club held the first fall meeting September 3, with a splendid attendance and wonderful club spirit.

The president of this wide-awake club, Mrs. Oscar McKenzie, one of the twenty Georgia women who attended the biennial at Los Angeles, and has returned to us with renewed energy and progressive plans for this year's work.

It was through her untiring efforts that our beautiful club house has been bought and paid for, and this building is a credit to our town.

It is there that the members serve the Kiwanis club dinner each week and we appreciate the cooperation shown us by this club in many ways. Our year book committee presented us with our calendar for this coming season of splendid programs embracing topics in all the lines of our state's work, emphasizing Tallulah Falls Industrial School for Mountain Boys and Girls, Ella F. White endowment fund, stressing study in civics and good citizenship.

Our club sponsored the play, "Microbe of Love" this fall and from it a neat sum was realized. The proceeds were used in fitting and furnishing a rest room in our school building. This has already been a good humanitarian asset for the children who were taken sick during school hours have been enjoying the comforts of the soft lounges and emergency installations.

Mrs. J. E. Hays, one of our most prominent club members and member of board of directors of General Federation of Women's Clubs, is at present in Washington city attending a board meeting. We look forward to her return, as she brings inspiring messages back to us from the different messengers of the 3,000,000 women in our organization and from our new president of the general federation, Mrs. John D. Sherman.

We will close with this plea for our club year:

"God give us wisdom in these coming days
And eyes unscaled that we clear vision see
Of that new world He would have us build
To life's ennoblement and His high ministry."

Milledgeville Club Hears Report On Tallulah School

The September meeting of the Milledgeville Woman's club was a splendid beginning for the year with a number of new members enrolled. The officers are: President, Miss Floride Allen; vice president, Mrs. M. H. Bland; corresponding secretary, Mrs. E. T. Holmes; recording secretary, Mrs. Roger Swint; treasurer, Mrs. W. A. Massey.

Plans for the year were discussed and several reports made by special committees. The most important announcement was the fact that the club was to sponsor a pure-food show during the month of November, and details will be given out later. Miss Allen stated that she had been able to secure the promise of Mrs. Dull, of Atlanta, to be on hand that week and give five lessons in cooking. This will be a drawing card for the show. It is the purpose of the club to have a large hall where various booths will be taken and exhibits displayed by merchants. A varied program for each evening is also being planned and there will be a number of things both to sell and give away. The club has entered into this with great enthusiasm and the outlook is that Miss Allen and her supporters will make a splendid success of the affair.

Another report which was of great interest was the one concerning the Tallulah Falls birthday party which was given a short time ago by this club. At the home of Mrs. Russell Bone of this city—one of the largest and prettiest in Milledgeville—this party was held. A bevy of pretty girls served punch on the big porch and from there the guests went into the living room to greet the receiving line. In this stood the officers of the club mentioned above, also Mrs. J. E. Pottle and Mrs. E. R. Hines, who were officers last year; Miss Manie Jones and Miss Annie Harper, officers of the county federation, and Mrs. Bone, at whose home the party was given. In the dining room, made attractive with flowers and pink tapers, the birthday cake with the fifteen candles burned radiently. Here cream and cake were served by more pretty girls and everybody was happy ever afterward. The most important thing of all stood just inside the main door—this being another "cake"—at least so it appeared to be. But, looking more closely, one saw a slit in the top, and then one knew that here there was to be put those pennies—just as many as you were years old.

"When the pie was opened
The birds began to sing—"

Only—when the cake was opened—the committee found that $36.64 had been "baked in the pie," and all felt that was a "dainty dish" to set before our own Tallulah.

Another feature of this first club meeting was the singing of the Georgia federation's song, of which Miss Allen had some for sale. And still another was the attendance prize, won by Mrs. L. P. Longino, a dear little "step-stool," all white, which all present would have given a pretty to have won.

Miss Allen's friends predict for her a splendid year as president of this club—she certainly made a good start.

The Clubwoman---Here, There and Everywhere

BY LESSIE STRINGFELLOW READ

Press Chairman and Director General Federation of Women's Clubs.

A singing world is a sane world, and Minnesota is teaching 'em how to sing. Clubwomen are taking the lead in the work and at the thirteenth annual convention of the Minnesota Federation of Women's Clubs at Excelsior, approximately 1,000 delegates and guests joined in community song and heard the program of six of the state's eight rural districts compete in choral contest.

The cup offered by one of the musical clubs in Minneapolis was won by St. James Mozart club, a rural club of the second district.

In addition to prominent place given music on the convention program, the importance of organizing junior clubs and county federations was stressed and universal membership of women in the federated clubs was urged.

"There are two distinct classes of clubs," Mrs. Thomas G. Winter, a speaker, pointed out, "and these differ in method of organization. There is the smaller club organized largely for self-culture, that is necessarily limited in membership; and the larger, all-inclusive, departmental or public welfare club, working for the good of the community as a whole. There is a place for every woman in the community in the larger civic club and every woman should be urged to join some such club. Even the smaller self-culture club is not justified, however, if it does not sometimes join in movements for public benefit and this it can do by federating with city, state or general federation."

Mrs. Winter delivered a stirring address on "The Soul of America." Other speakers of note included Herbert M. Wheeler, U. S. forest service; Agnes Peterson, assistant director of the Woman's Bureau of Labor, Washington; Judge Martin Wade, Iowa City, Iowa; Dr. Frederick M. Elliot, St. Paul. Mrs. J. E. Rounds, president, known to clubwomen in every state, presided.

Foundation For Health.

After a while, doctors will have to go out of business in self-defense. Just at present they are the only group of professionals known who spend their time putting themselves out of business. They are now cooperating with the Women's Foundation for Health, of which Dr. Martha Tracy, dean of the Women's Medical College of Pennsylvania, is president, and saying that if the series of books being put out by that organization is read, digested and put into practice, that the American woman and child will stay so healthy they won't need doctors.

"Exercise for Health" is title of the latest of the foundation health series written by a well-known clubwoman, Dr. Lenna Meanes. Reading this and other foundation books one comes to the conclusion that, in truth, a person is either a fool or his own physician at 40, and that some day it is going to be as disgraceful to be sick as it is to be "sent up" for any other law violation.

Want to Be a Librarian?

There is a great opportunity in this field, the American Library association recently pointed out in its Chicago meeting. Sarah C. N. Bogle, secretary of the board and director of the American library in Paris, writes:

"There is widespread need for trained librarians which library schools at present are incapable of supplying in sufficient number. There is need for more library schools and for expansion of those already existing. There is also great need for scholarships and fellowships in library schools, which offers opportunity for further service to women's clubs of the country." Headquarters for the association is 85 East Randolph avenue, Chicago.

Study Our Handicaps.

Adeline Otey-Warren, in the U. S. Indian field service, department of the interior, in commenting upon the Indian controversy, writes:

"I think a better understanding of Indian affairs will result from a careful study of the handicaps of the Indian bureau. For that reason I seconded the motion at the Los Angeles General Federation biennial convention that there be made a proper study of the whole Indian question by the federation.

"Discussion of the Indian question on the biennial program by John Collier involved fine legal points beyond the knowledge or comprehension of the average person. The matter was handled in a confusing, misleading way. As a matter of fact, leases and many other Indian affairs are handled according to statutes, the making of which is entirely up to congress and not to the Indian department or the secretary of the interior. Interpretations of these numerous statutes by the courts also governs departmental action in countless matters the general public never properly understands. Indian affairs are conducted according to law and are not in any important respect discretionary with the officers in charge. I had the courtesy to refrain from precipitating a fight on any Indian topic as I was given to understand the convention was not the place to conduct a combat. I yielded my time to Miss Ida May Adams, woman attorney of Los Angeles, well-known as a friend of the Indians and well-versed in Indian law."

A study of the Indian question; of the Indian wealth; of what the government has and has not done for its wards; of whether or not a nation has a right to keep in peonage any race of people; or whether if freedom for the negro race is right, freedom for the Indian race is not also right, is to be made by the general federation—or at least by a great many clubs in the federation, according to reports coming in, and Mrs. Otero-Warren's backing of this study will no doubt do much to stimulate interest in it.

Mrs. Moore's Flag Bearers.

The above is the name of a club composed of presidents of states during the administration of Mrs. Philip North Moore, 1908-1912, together with department chairmen and board members. The name was chosen because it was at Mrs. Moore's two biennials that presidents of each state federation first brought their state flags and told of their state's assets. The organization will hold a reunion at the next biennial in Atlantic City.

Quinquennial Preparations.

Mrs. Moore, who is now president of the American Council of the International Council of Women, the latter organization to meet in America in 1925, announces great activity in preparation for that world meeting to be held in Washington next May 4-14. Mrs. Moore will attend the meeting of the Canadian Council in Toronto, October 8-14, and has called a meeting of the board of directors of the United States council immediately following, in Washington. Congress is expected to make generous appropriation for the entertainment of the world visitors expected at the quinquennial convention.

District Presidents Are Urged To Organize and Federate Clubs

In a letter sent to the district presidents last week, Mrs. A. H. Brenner, the vice president-at-large, urges that where a club is in the process of organization the district officers bring all pressure to bear in order to federate such clubs before the state convention to be held in Atlanta November 11 to 14.

This is probably the last year that the gavil will be given to the diserict reporting the largest number of new clubs, as a new rule for the bestowal of the gavil is under consideration.

A large number of clubs have been reported as ready to federate. The early fall months are full of conflicting duties which may cause those interested to defer action until too late for representation at the convention. The constitution requires that the treasurer shall close her books one month before the annual convention, which will be on October 11. This makes it necessary that the application, with a copy of the constitution of the club and dues for one year shall be in the hands of the membership committee by that date.

Sixteen splendid new clubs have been federated since the last annual convention. These are the Canton Woman's club; Vidalia, Bronte Study club; Atlanta, Osteopathic Women of Georgia; Atlanta, West End Woman's club; Smyrna, Shakespeare club; Atlanta, Grady Hospital Auxiliary; Fort Bennin, Woman's club; Atlanta, Hoosier club; Atlanta, War Mothers' Service Star Legion of Fulton County; Decatur, Woman's club; Gainesville R. F. D., Cedar Creek Community club; Atlanta, Tech Woman's club; Bowersville Woman's club; Atlanta Civic Club of West End; Doerun Woman's club; Carroll County Home Demonstration Council.

Many clubs have responded to the request of the president, Mrs. Brantley, and have sent in revised lists of their officers, but it is exceedingly difficult to reach the vast number of individual clubs through the press. Mrs. Brenner is, therefore, asking the district presidents to furnish her with a list of their clubs in good standing, the names of officers, the number of members and the classification of each. That is, whether group 1 with general federation membership, group 2 or group 3. State if city and county federations hold general federation membership. This information is necessary in order that the committee may make an accurate report at the convention. Seven of the twelve district presidents were elected to office in April and May. All are most enthusiastic and determined to excell their predecessors in club extension. Much interest centers in district presidents' evening at the convention. Mrs. S. V. Sanford, chairman of the program committee, has arranged to present the work of the districts in a most attractive manner.

Send new clubs to Mrs. A. H. Brenner, 2544 Henry street, Augusta, Ga.

Sixth District Executive Board.

The executive board of the sixth district, Georgia Federation of Woman's Clubs, is called by the president, Miss Lucile Aiken, of Jenkinsburg, to meet at Jackson in the Woman's club room on Friday, October 3. Luncheon will be served at 50 cents per plate.

All chairmen of the district and county presidents are expected to attend the meeting.

Worth-While Club Meets in Lyons.

Lyons, Ga., September 27.—The Lyons Worth-While club met at the home of Mrs. I. H. Corbitt with a good attendance. The meeting opened with a paper on social welfare read by Mrs. C. G. Garner. The club voted to put on a book shower for the local school library in the near future. Mrs. R. S. Wilson was appointed chairman of the committee to arrange plans. A contract for erecting the coping around the railroad park called the "Park-Aloha" was let by the club and the work will start next month. A tree planting campaign for beautifying the town was planned for October with the expectation of getting the streets of Lyons lined with shade trees. A committee was appointed to nominate new officers to be elected at the next meeting.

Mrs. Judd In China.

Friends of Mrs. M. E. Judd, who is traveling in China and is now the guest of Dr. and Mrs. Stuart at the University of China, are greatly concerned for her. The civil war in China possibly has not interfered as yet with Mrs. Judd's plans, but her friends hope to have cables assuring them of her safety. Mrs. Judd is accompanied by Miss Agnes Farrar, of Georgia, a niece of Wade Farrar, of Chattanooga. Dr. Stuart is a Kentuckian and is a brother to Edwin Stuart, of Chattanooga.—The Lookout.

BOOK REVIEWS IN TABLOID

"Julie Cane" is the latest story written by Mr. O'Higgins, and of which he says in a recent interview:

"From the days of Shakespeare down, the imaginative writer has been eloquently contemptuous of life and character in the small town. He has usually come from a small town himself; he has been a white blackbird in it, and his distinguished contempt is his revenge upon the small town's early disprisal of him. This is all natural and inevitable enough, but human life and character are no more contemptible in one scene than another.

"A girl like 'Julie Cane,' of Findellen, N. J., may be as much a personage in her own right as the daughter of royalty. Her father, in the little grocery store, may face the same eternal mysteries of life and destiny as Napoleon philosophizing on the stars that shone above the Mediterranean when he sailed on his famous expedition to Egypt. Her mother may see the riddle of existence eye for eye with the greatest saints and hermits. Her young lover, agonizing at her door in Center street, may be as torn with love and hatred as Lord Byron.

"The drama of human life does not depend on scenery or costume for its dignity or its pathos—or, at any rate, that is the conviction in which one writes a book like 'Julie Cane.'"

THE MAYFLOWER PILGRIMS.

The Romantic Story of the Mayflower Pilgrims—And Its Place in the Life of Today, by A. C. Addison, author of "Old Boston," "The Puritan Sons," etc. With numerous original illustrations, is the most attractive book that has reached us as yet among the early fall books—and when the announcement is made that there is a list of beautiful books ready for Christmas, it will be among them.

Even the paper cover is the same design as the handsome cloth cover, blue and gold with its central feature, the mayflower, in gold. On the inside of the cover, above a most attractive sketch of the pilgrims, the following lines of Wordsworth are reproduced:

"Well worthy to be magnified are they
Who, with sad hearts of friends and country took
A last farewell, their loved abodes forsook,
And hallowed ground in which their fathers lay."

This is followed on the opposite page by the well-known lines of a long-ago poetess, whose poems are frequently reproduced—Mrs. Hemans:

"The breaking waves dashed high
On a stern and rock-bound coast;
And the woods, against a stormy sky
Their giant branches tossed."

Memorial after memorial has been dedicated to the "New World Pioneers," the last being on the fifth of August, 1910, at which time President Taft, in his address, said that through the spirit of the Pilgrims' the United States has been furnished with the highest ideals of moral life and political citizenship, and just three years before this, Mr. Roosevelt, while the central figure at the laying of a corner stone, followed the same line of thought; and the same appreciation is being expressed by other speakers, who are called upon to pay a tribute to another monument erected in honor of our Pilgrim fathers, whose influence cannot be obliterated from the memory of our people.

The author's motive in presenting the present story of the Mayflower Pilgrims is a book small enough and yet sufficiently plain to cover the pilgrimage of the forefathers, of whom the poet Whittier wrote:

"Those brave men who brought
To the ice and iron of our winter time
A will as firm, a creed as stern, and wrought
With one mailed hand and with the other fought."

It is the old, old story told over again in beautiful language, with numerous original and attractive illustrations that will not only appeal to the reader, but even tell the brave story without words. (L. C. Page & Co., Boston.)

FAMOUS NAVAL OFFICERS.

"Famous American Naval Officers," by Charles Lee Lewis, assistant professor, United States Naval academy, is attractively illustrated with pictures of the sea, each of which tells a story without the words.

While the author did not intend for this to be a complete history of the United States, he has related the most interesting and important events that have taken place in the lives of these famous officers.

The preface and the introduction will be of interest to the reader, for it presents many interesting ideas in connection with the biography of the naval officers, among them being Paul Jones, Stephen Decatur, Isaac Hull, David Porter, Oliver Hazard Perry, Alfred Thayer Mahan, Robert Edward Peary, George Dewey and the "War With Spain," William Sowden Sims and 'Our Navy in the World War," etc.

The author has quoted from poems and books of well-known writers, among them "The Southerners," by Mrs. Cyrus Townsend Brady, being particularly impressive, as is "The Song of Dewey's Guns," by Sam Walter Foss:

"The hand that held the scepter once
Of all the great world seas,
And paved her march with dead men's bones
'Neath all the circling suns
Grew feint with deadly fear
When the thunder song grew near,
For the dirge of Spain was sounded
By the song of Dewey's guns."

O. HENRY MEMORIAL AWARD.

Prize Stories of 1923—Chosen by the Society of Arts and Sciences, of which the New York Times says: "No more fitting tribute to the genius of William Sydney Porter (O. Henry) could possibly have been devised than that of this 'Memorial Award' of a prize to the best short story by an American writer during the year."

The introduction by Blanche Colton Williams, a popular author of many interesting books, explains the manner in which the selection was made. From the first list were selected the stories by the authors presented here. Out of this smaller number three were voted the annual prizes: To "Prelude," by Edgar Valentino Smith, goes the first award of $500; "A Friend of Napoleon," by Richard Connell, the second of $250; to "Towers of Fame," by Elizabeth Irons Folsom, the special prize of $100 for the best brief story under 3,000 words.

It was in 1918 that the Society of Arts and Sciences paid tribute to the memory of William Sydney Porter at a dinner in honor of his genius. This was the beginning and later it was decided to offer a prize for the best work in the field in which he was the admitted master. Professor Blanche Colton Williams, chairman of the committee, also says in her introduction that the committee disagreed—"the pessimist says the level is lower; the optimist declares it higher." "A fair plateau marked by a few peaks," says another.

HARPER'S PRIZE CONTEST.

The first prize of $1,250 in the second short-story contest held by Harper's Magazine has been awarded to Fleta Campbell Springer for her story, "Legend," the editors of the magazine have announced.

Edwina Stanton Babcock's story, "Wavering Gold," and Conrad Aiken's story, "The Disciple," were tied for second place, having an equal number of points according to the system of scoring agreed upon in advance with the judges, Meredith Nicholson, Zona Gale and Bliss Perry. It was, therefore, decided that instead of awarding a second prize of $750 and a third prize of $500, the magazine should award two second prizes of $750 each.

Three stories received honorable mention: "A Great Club Woman," by Margaret Culkin Banning; "The Elder Brother," by Charles Caldwell Dobie; and "Cameo," by Edgar Valentine Smith.

The first-prize story "Legend," will be published in the November Harper's, and the second-prize stories will follow in subsequent issues.

The third short-story competition began on July 1 and closes on September 30.

The editors of Harper's Magazine make the following statement: "It is interesting and, we believe, significant that the judges, considering the stories solely on their merits and without knowing who wrote them, awarded the first prize and one of the second prizes to writers who have been represented in Harper's for many years. The fact that Mrs. Springer's story was ranked highest by a jury of three disinterested authors and critics, representing different schools of thought, but all of them discriminating critics of literature, and none of them aware of its authorship—is not this a notable vindication of the opinion which we have long held, that she is one of the very ablest and most distinguished short-story writers in America."

THE CAUSES OF INDUSTRIAL UNREST.

The subject of this book by John A. Fitch is not new, but it is exhaustless, for it is too big a problem for even one generation to reach a proper solution.

"If 'the man in the street,' who is forced to carry a large share of the burden in the case of disputes between capital and labor in the essential industries, is ever to have a voice in their settlement, he must have an understanding of the causes of the irritation and enmity which lie behind most strikes."

This is a very important subject and the book is very readable. The author has been studying this question for the past twenty years, and the data so gathered he has given to the public through this one volume in which he tries to give the main point of view out of which the general labor struggle emerges.

He is a conservative writer who has presented the facts in an impartial way. After exhausting the subject of the different causes of unrest he concludes with a chapter on "Capital, Labor and the Public." (Harper & Brothers. New York.)

CURRENT MAGAZINES—SEPTEMBER.

American Review of Reviews for September has attracted a good deal of attention, the frontispiece being "Notifying" President Coolidge. Under "The Progress of the World" as usual, every subject is discussed; some are interesting, some are dull, some are pessimistic, but for the most part they present an optimistic appearance.

Politics here, there, and everywhere, takes the leading place, with an interesting particle by William Hard on La Follette, and there are a number of other interesting features that will appeal to the reader. Another very attractive feature is "Various Summer Topics in Cartoons."

International Book Review for September has for its leading article a story, entitled "Running a Pioneer Ranch in Africa," by Frederick O'Brien; The Premier of France as an Author," by Ernest Dimnet; "Benevenuto Cellini Rediivens Manhattan," by Chester T. Crowell; "A Radical" (Ludwig Lewisohn) Praises the American Classic," by Richard le Gallienne; another interesting feature is "Picking Out the Poets of Tomorrow." Percy A. Hutchinson discusses "Joseph Conrad, Alchemist of the Sea." "Rupert Hughes States Burr and Betty Jumen"—this write-up, criticism or discussion by Jim Tully, of "The Golden Ladder," will be widely read. The writer sums it up as "a harrowing study of an American Becky Sharp." Temple Bailey writes of Washington life. As a whole every library table needs the International Book Review, for only a few things have been mentioned that can be found in this issue.

LITERARY DRIFTWOOD.

The information that a father gave his inquisitive son in the familiar old rhyme about Alexander is, like so many pleasant myths, disproved by modern science.

"How big was Alexander, Pa?
Was he so big that he could stand
On some tall steeple high,
And while his feet were on the ground
His hands could touch the sky?"

but his matter-of-fact father answered,

"Oh, no, my child, about as large
As I or Uncle James."

It appears from Alexander's sarcophagus in the Imperial museum of Stamboul that the conqueror, while he could not touch the sky, was indeed a superman. In 'The Alps, the Danube and the Near East," Frank G. Carpenter gives the interior measurements of the sarcophagus, a huge block of Pentelic marble six feet in height. His tape measure shows that the interior would allow Alexander to be full nine feet tall, or nine inches shorter than Goliath of Gath.

Charles Nordhoff served as an ambulance driver in France. Then he went into the Lafayette Flying corps and ended up in the United States air service. Since the war he has traveled in the South Seas and written stories and sketches more or less based on his various experiences. His latest work is an adventure story pure and simple, called "The Pearl Lagoon." The plot is thrilling, the atmosphere authentic.

"Redcliff," in Eden Phillpotts' new novel of that name, is a village on the Devon coast, and Mr. Phillpitts' story of its romances and its feuds, its humors and its ironies, is full of his best quality of picturesqueness.

Johnny Stamp's wooing of Miss Shears' city-bred niece, and the incident of the funeral procession which developed into a hand-to-hand fight over a disputed right of way to cross the mill-owner's meadow are two of the unique events of the tale.

'Leaves from the Golden Bough," called by Lady Frazer, and consisting of popular selections from her husband's book, will soon be published. These selections deal with the beliefs and customs of primitive peoples in different parts of the world. There are chapters on The Witches' Sabbath, The Were-Wolves, Binding the Wind, Christmas and the Mistletoe, The Jinee of the Sea, The Propitiation of Dead Whales, Kings of Fire and Water, and many other quaint customs and legends.

"Scientific Research and Human Welfare," by President Harris, of Brigham Young university, and Newebrn I. Butt. This book gives a striking picture of the changes in everyday life which have been brought about during the last hundred years as a result of scientific research.

It tells how science has discovered and controlled the causes of disease, has developed the telephone, telegraph, and wireless, has changed our methods of illumination and transportation, and has inaugurated improvements in agriculture, mining, industry and the home.

All our chief magistrates from Washington to Coolidge are described both in their public and private capacities in a new book by James Morgan, called "Our Presidents." In it will be found the answers to many curious question, such as: Which president was driven a fugitive from the white house! Who is the only president that never went to school? Which president never made a speech? What three presidents selected their successors? Which two presidents were born and buried side by side?

Five popular novels by Charles Major will be reissued on September 9—'Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall," 'A Gentle Knight of Old Bradenburg," "The Touchstone of Fortune," 'Yolanda, Maid of Burgundy," and "The Forest Hearth." "The Forest Hearth" is one of Mr. Major's delightful stories of the Blue river settlement in the Indiana wilderness. The others are all tales of romance and adventure in English and continental settings, full of charm and mystery and with a happy ending.

HI SCHOOLS READY FOR FULL SESSIONS

All Atlanta junior and senior high schools Monday will swing into full sessions for the first time this year, it was stated Saturday by Willis A. Sutton, superintendent of schools. With completion of portable buildings at Boys' High, Tech High and Bass Junior High schools, those institutions will be able to operate on full-time schedules, completing the list of the city's schools which have been on part time programs since the opening of school early this month.

The two senior high schools were to have operated with full sessions Friday, but rearrangement of some classes could not be completed in time, and inauguration of the normal program was postponed until Monday. Students at Boys' High and Tech High will report at 8:30 o'clock mornings, and will be dismissed at 2:10 o'clock in the afternoon.

Work has been started on covered walks between high schools and portable buildings, and when completed this week will permit classes to move between buildings without interrupting schedules. During the past several weeks rain, by preventing students from transferring from the school buildings to the portables, has forced cancellation of several classes, and curtailment of others.

Despite all handicaps, fine progress in class work has been reported, and students have kept pace with their studies so well that lengthening of the school day to make up for lost time will not be necessitated.

Blackbeard's Last Fight

Between the years 1650 and 1720 pirates harassed trading vessels and the American colonies, especially along the southern coast. One of the most villainous was Blackbeard, whose career though exciting, lasted but two short years. He menaced the Coast of the Carolinas and held the governor in practical subjection. At last, however, as Blackbeard grew more terrible, the people appealed to Governor Spotswood of Virginia for help to rid the coast of the pirate and his crew.

The Governor sent out two sloops commanded by Captain Brand and Captain Maynard, brave and experienced naval officers who felt that they had a small chance of capturing the pirate or even getting away with their lives. At last the sloops caught sight of the pirate ship.

Finally Blackbeard boarded the sloop of which Maynard was in command and sought out the captain. The swaggering pirate, confident with a long list of victories, got the surprise of his life when he found that Maynard was his equal and better as a fighter. Blackbeard drew his pistol, but the shot went wild and Maynard at last brought down the terrible pirate. When the other pirates saw their leader dead, they gave up the fight.

VIGNETTES OF LIFE—HOBBIES

By FRANK GODWIN

SENSATION FELT BY A SENSITIVE, LAW-ABIDING CITIZEN WHO HAS HAD A PRESCRIPTION FILLED

MENTAL ATTITUDE OF A MAN WHOSE NAME APPEARED IN THE PAPER FOR THE FIRST TIME

The Whole Story by Princess Bibesco,

She Wrote Her Life, Instead of Living It--- Until Realty Thrust Itself Into Her Dreams.

She looked so radiant that Howard himself must have felt either a little glad or a little guilty.

"IT IS so like you to want to know the whole story."

"Please let me be like myself."

"And it is so like me to pamper you, isn't it?"

"Delightfully like you. I want you to begin at the beginning. How did you come to know her? No one has ever met a best-seller. I have always felt it would be easier to get to know a person who had invented a vacuum cleaner than some one who sold 300,000 copies of a book—because, how does one set about it? The whole literary world stands between you. E. M. Forster would quite genuinely never have heard of her, and the rest of the intelligentsia would hardly be intelligent enough. To them she would be a giggle—an unconscious echo of their private schools. One might approach Arnold Bennett, of course, but his books sell too well. It would be the rubbing in of a resemblance and a difference, and he might not know that one knew which was which. Yes, clearly, it would have to be an accident. It was an accident, wasn't it?"

"A kind of accident."

"Of course, I know every time that I go to the country I am surrounded by rectories overflowing with serial writers—but how am I to find out?"

"Why don't you write, 'Care of the Daily Mirror,' 'Dear madam: My life has not been the same since I read "Clare's Calvary." Would it be possible for me to meet you? There are so many things I would like to talk to you about,' etc."

"No, I couldn't do that—it wouldn't be decent."

"Dear me, you are like a New York friends of mine, who, when told that a young lady of his acquaintance was in love with Chaliapin, said: 'But it's impossible, her father was a member of the Racquet club.'"

"Margaret, you are prevaricating—please don't tease me, I want my Arabian Night."

"From Balham?"

"Was it Balham?"

"No, of course, not—Godalming."

"Let me nail you down to the first fact. Miss Eunice Evans lives at Godalming."

"That is not the beginning. The beginning is, as you meant it to be, in a rectory."

"But how did you peep through the window?"

"Miss Evans, the eldest Miss Evans, Miss Ethel Evans, was my governess."

"Good heavens!"

"Not at all. My Miss Evans was everything that a governess should be. She wore her watch on a watch chain, tucked into her belt; she sketched a little in water colors; she played the piano, allowing her chords and arpeggios a communal life. She knew all about English grammar, and she believed that everything was for the best. She lowered her voice in speaking about the dead, and raised it in speaking about the clergy. She was never without a shoe horn and a button hook. Her brush and comb were always in a bag, and so was her nightgown, which was called a night dress. She never traveled without eau de cologne encased in wicker work, and brandy concealed in a small scent bottle. These excesses were covered by the formula, 'One never knows.'"

"And Eunice?"

"Don't you want to know any more about Ethel?"

"I know all about Ethel. She adored you and she always said 'Margaret has a very hot temper, but it is quickly over. I can't bear a person who sulks—of course, she is a difficult child—so passionate—but a heart of gold!'"

"How do you know?"

"All governesses say that about their pupils."

"But I have got a heart of gold."

"Very possibly. And Miss Evans explained that what she really liked about you was your open nature. Those brown eyes, she would say, would harbor no deceit."

"She was quite right. Miss Evans was the niece of an archdeacon. It was long before archdeacons had had a word said against them. Eunice was her younger sister. Occasionally, when we were in London she would come and spend a night or two, and we would go to 'Julius Caesar' and a promenade concert."

"Was it always 'Julius Caesar?'"

"Once it was 'Raffles.' In winter we would have tea at Charbonnel and Walker—chocolate with whipped cream—and in summer we would go to Gunter's and eat strawberry ices."

"Big ones?"

"Small ones, with a glass of iced water and a sponge cake."

"And Eunice, what did she look like? What did she talk about?"

"Her hair was a little fairer than hair colored. It was always loose with a net trying to keep up with it, a net that was either lamentably short, or else sprawling about her forehead. Her eyes were gray—they were bound to be gray, weren't they?—rather charming and surprised, with a nice foolish expression. She always thought it so wonderful to be in London, in the same town as the national gallery and the British museum, and so much wickedness."

"And the mother of parliaments?"

"Yes, and Park Lane. She felt that Park Lane was full of international financiers. She adored mother—mother was a dream then, you know—and she used to love to see her dressed for a ball with her jewels on. Miss Evans—Ethel—said that the expression of her eyes was the crowning jewel, but I don't think Eunice felt that. She said that there was something very gay about diamonds."

"Poor Miss Eunice."

"She is so rich now—so very rich."

"But how did it all begin?"

"I don't know—'Wax Flowers' it was called—her first book I mean. It was a tremendous success. The hero was suspected of cowardice, and he went out to India under another name and saved his rival's life—or was it his native servant's? Anyway, the heroine didn't believe in him for a long time—not for about 400 pages—but she became very humble at the end, calling him, I remember, her 'Sahib,' which is a term of respect, isn't it?"

"Don't be flippant Margaret—what happened then?"

"Well, she wrote one book after another. Her heroes became more and more manly—they took their beloveds to shacks and chained them up and told them they ought to be whipped—perhaps, they even whipped them—I don't remember. But the ladies, though unmarried, were as safe and sacred as they would have been in their own drawing rooms at Tooting, and when once they had learned their lesson they were allowed to marry and dream of cradles. Later, much later, there was a new crop, pages and pages of unconsummated marriages, but that has been the last state."

"But Margaret, I want to know about Eunice herself."

"Well, Mr. Evans died and Ethel died, and Eunice took her house at Godalming. One couldn't see it at all from the road, she said, and one could get to the Hog's Back quite easily. There was the biggest monkey puzzle I have ever seen in the garden, and lilacs and laburnums and syringa, all looking so unflowery. There was a summer house, too—a rustic one and arches of Dorothy Perkins ramblers. And I remember a little bit of artificial water with a tiny waterfall and some elaborate rocks peering about among maiden hair. 'Of course,' Eunice said, 'I know there isn't really maiden hair in the wilds, but poor father always said that what is beautiful is true.'"

"And inside?"

"Inside? There was a pianola and a gramophone and lots of little tables covered with slums of little silver things. And the wall paper looked like moire. Everything looked like something else. The lamp shades were dolls, the tea cozy was a golliwog, the books were card boxes, the cigarettes were marzipan, only in the hall there was a tiger skin with the tiger's head, and even he was considered by Eunice to look very much like a tiger."

"And did she like it?"

"Well, it was an achievement—a delegate of a house. It represented prosperity and space and the possibility of an unlimited overcrowding of objects."

"And her bedroom? Describe her room to me."

"It was frilly. The pillow cases had frills and so had the sheets. The dressing table was a crinoline of white lace tied up with bows. There were photographs of her father, of Ethel, of the archdeacon and an enchanting daguerreotype of her mother with a plaited bun and black velvet trimmings to her flounces. There was a full length oval looking glass which always tilted too much forward or too much back, and every drawer had a sachet in it."

"And didn't she travel?"

"Well, she was always thinking of going to Monte Carlo, but she felt that it would look so odd for a woman alone—and her friend, Mrs. Jenkins, who sketched so beautifully, always seemed to prefer Dieppe—so to Dieppe they went, and ate the sort of honey which is always out of a comb and lunched at half past twelve, because it was so important to be taken right out of one's self abroad. And some of Mrs. Jenkins' pictures were sold at the church bazaar and everybody agreed that they looked so foreign."

"But you, Margaret, surely you of all people must have been able to find out what she thought about."

"She thought about others—at least she thought she did. She was always doing kind things and being fantastically generous—she enjoyed that—the surprise of the porter or the postman or the collecting nun."

"But did she have no life of her own?"

"Well, you see she wrote."

"But I mean—"

"She wrote her own life—it was, in a way, so much better than living it. She was able, you understand, to have red hair and long fingers and difficult over lapping love affairs. She could be first arrogant and then self-abasing. Eunice longed to abase herself, but there was no one but her neat parlor maid, and that wouldn't have done for the niece of an archdeacon. And then all of the paraphernalia of yachts and casinos and Simla garden parties—those were the settings in which she liked to move, and it was so much simpler on paper—after all, with the written page you can never be one mango short."

"But surely she must have wanted more?"

"Well, I suppose she felt it would inevitably resolves itself into being less."

"But didn't she want to be kissed?"

"Yes, I suppose so, but only against her will. She was determined, so pathetically, resolutely, determined, to be mastered. She told me that she thought it only natural for men to be rough—it didn't prevent them from being tender, too. But, of course, no one ever dreamt of being rough with Eunice—she was so kind and gentle and sympathetic. And then, she was a little short sighted—I always think it must be almost impossible for a short-sighted person to inspire brutality."

"And so no one ever made love to her?"

"Well, a nice doctor wanted to marry her. She told me about it. She said, 'I ought to have felt myself to be a fortunate woman.' 'What did he say?' I asked. 'Well, he put his two hands on my shoulders and said, "Miss Eunice, I have the deepest respect and admiration for you—don't you think we might jog along pretty happily in double harness?" 'Poor Eunice, I said, 'of course you couldn't.' 'No,' she agreed eagerly, 'I couldn't, could I? I said, 'you see I'm not in love with you,' and he answered easily, 'That doesn't matter — you musn't imagine that we are characters in one of your books,' and I couldn't explain to him. 'Of course,' she added, determined to be fair, 'he is a widower.'"

"What a horrible story, Margaret."

"THAT was about the time that she wrote 'The Masquerade.' Don't you remember the scene at the end when Pearl slips out of her house in Grosvenor square, never to return? Out into the night she walked, under these same stars that somewhere were shining for him. In the heavy scented darkness of the east, a boatman was singing a love song. You could hear his oars splashing lazily, and the rising and falling of his cracked voice. And though the notes were broken, is not the song of love the same the world over? To Gerald sitting with his head in his hands, it seemed that another voice was singing, and through the vast silence he could hear a whisper—'I am coming, beloved—'"

"Poor Eunice."

"I think she was very depressed at that time. Reality had bumped its head into her dreams. Presumably the doctor had been a man, and what he had offered her must be a sort of love. It took her quite a long time to clear her mind of these discouraging thoughts and reenter her own world. For quite a long time zest had gone out of the flashing heroine, as she stooped humbly to kiss the man of action's hand—"

"And she stayed in Godalming?"

"Yes. There was a semi-circular gravel drive, and opposite the front door there were two flower beds forming the monogram 'E. E.' in begonias. In winter the same design was carried out in white pebbles. 'It is nice for one's two names to begin with the same letter,' she told me a little wistfully. 'Yes,' I said, 'and you will be able to have that even when you are married. Fame has entitled you to them forever.' She brightened a little — 'I don't think I shall ever marry,' she murmured. 'I want so much.' And it was true—there were no compromises for Eunice. She could order the meals and go to church and help with the school treat and attend the vicerage sewing circle, but none of those things were real to her. Her real life was altogether different. Quite easily the church became a dim mediaeval chapel, the monkey puzzle stretched into a spreading cedar, and Mrs. Jenkins herself, brisk and managing and vital, would be transformed alternately into a warm-hearted eccentric duchess or a venomous worldly aunt.

"You see now why Eunice stayed at Godalming — why she didn't buy a country house—why she had no Rolls Royce. Knole would have been of no good to her because it was not also the Villa d'Este and Chenonceau—and the motor would have needed to be a coach and a camel and a victoria. With human beings it was the same thing. The pope himself would have been useless to Eunice because he wasn't all the other popes. If you are a Doria, what a pity not to be a Borgia or a Medici—how disappointing for Alexander not to have been Caesar and Napoleon as well. Once you have personality, is not every limitation an insult, even if you be limited by the future of the past?"

"Margaret, you are giving too much philosophy to Eunice."

"No, I am only giving you a rather over-logical description of Eunice's subconscious attitude towards life. You see, she never wanted the undramatic—that was what made her books and that was what made her life. There were to be no gray, psychological moments whatever with reality clicking like the new fastening of a bracelet. That was the doctor's crime — he had behaved as if they were leading ordinary lives, and, of course, Eunice wasn't—'Wax Flowers' was real. 'Clare's Calvary, was real, but not the monkey puzzle, not the photograph of the archdeacon."

"And so she had no personal relations?"

"She had what is called a host of friends,' only they were outside her life—as outside as a switchback or a game of croquet. We are all such muddles compared to Eunice. We try to mix the world of our thoughts and dreams with the world of our acts and habits, and so we inflate our relationships with illusions and prick our visions with realism and all the time we are being tugged at by frustrated fulfillment."

"You humbug, Margaret—you with your coat of many colors."

"You see, we all lack courage. I inject a hope into every disappointment—I safeguard each dream with a doubt. Eunice wasn't like that. She didn't try to make her house beautiful because it wasn't necessary, and didn't live in it. When she had first bought it it had been a toy, but the monogram and the tiger and the maiden hair represented her last compromises with fate. There were no more subterfuges. After that she lived entirely in marble palaces and shacks and tents. She even gave up writing on pink note paper."

"And her clothes? Didn't she care about her clothes?"

"No, I don't think so. She didn't so much dress for dinner as change for dinner—it was a matter of a fichu instead of a collar, short sleeves instead of long ones. You see, she was really approaching a roulette table, very decollete—in a hat, with an ermine wrap dripping from her shoulders and a long jade cigaret holder in her mouth—for it was only after the entry of Howard upon the scene that the disastrous collision occurred."

"Howard?"

"O, I forgot that you didn't know about Howard. Howard is the story. I wonder if he is worthy of being it; perhaps he is. I, myself, always find it so difficult to believe in Howard—he seems so unnaturally like a teminist idea of a man—"

"In what way?"

"You mustn't be impatient—Howard has got to be uncoiled like a snake—nothing would induce me to show you the whole of him at once. And then, there are so many Howards. There is Howard as Eunice saw him, Howard as Eunice sees him, Howard as I see him, Howard as he sees himself. Then, there is the Godalming house as Howard saw it, and Eunice as Howard saw her. You see, it was all misleading even for him."

"Mayn't I see the head of the snake?"

"Howard is—these are undeniable facts—6 foot 2, large, heavy, with a mustache which would successfully gobble up a smaller man. His eyes are like large melting chocolates—they can only melt, they have no other function—you always feel as if they were going to drip. He came to Godalming from East Africa, bathed in the glamor of big game. Actually, I think he had been sent there in the optimistic spirit which makes so many families regard the colones as professions in themselves."

"THE first time I saw him he was having tea with Eunice. I will say this for him, he certainly did dwarf the drawing room. Even the tea service looked like a doll's tea service. I remember thinking at the time that he was as much out of place in that room as one of Eunice's day dreams. But, of course, I was wrong—just as wrong as she was—"

"Did she—"

"You are trying to hustle me." He sat there saying nothing at all. At least he said: 'I'm not much of a tea drinker,' and when Eunice pressed a whisky and soda on him he accepted with the words, "Everything in moderation, especially water." Eunice murmured, 'I suppose in the tropics, I mean in the wilds—' and then she broke off nervously with, 'Mr. Carruthers is a great traveler, Margaret, dear.' 'How delightful,' I said, hoping that it didn't sound too discouraging. 'Ever been to Africa?' he asked. 'No.' 'Ever been to British East Africa?' 'No.' 'Pity.'"

"And that was that—Eunice begged him to tell us about his adventures, but he merely muttered, 'Never been much of a talker.' Personal pronouns played practically no part in his vocabulary. That was the beginning. After that, everything was as swift and relentless as a Greek tragedy. Howard was broke, Eunice was rich, I was helpless— And there were things, one had reluctantly to admit it, that Howard understood. Women, for instance, in a facetious music hall sense of the word. And he studied Eunice as no cat ever studied a mouse. He had, I can't deny it, a sort of low cunning. At first, he said things like 'a lady's privilege' each time Eunice changed her mind—but, later he veered round to a line of rather coarse brutal directness. Women, he asserted, were the playthings of man's pleasure. He talked about Shanghai—Eunice trembled a little. 'The nonsense men put up with nowadays makes me sick,' he would say—'A man should be master in his own house—if his women folk don't obey him, he should give them a good spanking.'"

"But he must have been quite dreadful."

"He was dreadful—but Eunice was thrilled. "Dogs adore him," she would explain a little apologetically.

"And then, of course, he proposed?"

"'I'm not much of a hand at talking,' he said, 'but I think you can guess,' and he took her in his arms. 'He has loved me all the time,' she explained, 'only he didn't dare admit it to him-

"Weeping Willow" Heroine Becomes Comedienne

"I am always in deadly earnest."

Chrystal Herne Says She Has Always Found It Easy to Make People Cry, but She Prefers to Make Them Laugh

By John H. Lewy

THERE is something essentially interesting in a play that has been rejected by a number of managers before some producer agrees to take a chance with it, and which becomes the talk of Broadway from the day it opens. The particular play is Rachel Crothers' "Expressing Willie," which was read and unfavorably passed on by at least five producers before the Equity Players staged it.

What is the reason? Can it be that the managers still know little about what the public wants? With this question in mind, we called on Miss Chrystal Herne, the star of the performance.

"Well, at first reading the play sounds a trifle thin," Miss Herne told us, "and I must confess that in the beginning I was rather unwilling to take the part. It was not until after we had begun rehearsals that I began to see the real beauty of the part I was to play, for in spite of the satirical elements, the underlying sentiment is beautiful. I think it is the most human character I have ever portrayed on the stage. Its delightful to see this innocent country girl visit the large house and to witness her broadening, flowering, as it were, into a charming woman.

"Miss Crothers knew that the play had sterling qualities, and I was delighted to portray the heroine, once I myself appreciated them. It was the determination of the author that put 'Expressing Willie' on the boards today. Perhaps it was too modern for the managers to attempt, if they did understand it. Several members of the Equity Council, which passes on plays, were dubious about its reception by the public."

"Was there much difficulty encountered in rehearsals?"

"If you mean regarding the play itself, none at all. Not a line of the original manuscript was changed. There was a little difficulty in the casting. Several actors were tried for some of the parts before the final selection. Miss Crothers knew what she wanted, and scouted around until she found it. She is a most brilliant stage directress, probably the finest of the women who have attempted it. All the credit for the performance must go to her."

We asked Miss Herne what she considered the qualifications of a good comedienne, what she thought the essence of good comedy.

"Utter sincerity," she answered. "Whatever comedy I may achieve in my role is due only to sincerity. However many laughs I may bring, I am always in deadly earnest.

"Of course, I am not known as a comedienne, generally. It seems that I started my career as the injured heroine of a melodrama, and since then, whenever a manager has such a part, I'm asked to take it. I became so disgusted two years ago that I stayed off the stage for nearly a year.

"The relief came when I was asked to portray a negro washerwoman. I was finally persuaded at least to read the play, and I took the part. It was marvelous. But the public wouldn't come to see the show, and even my friends deserted me.

"Of course, in a way, I can't blame them. It's too bad, though, because in my opinion it was the best play of the year. Without doubt it should have been awarded the Pulitzer prize. The play was 'Rose Anne.'

"After my role in 'The Acquittal' and in 'The Elton Case,' this season has been more or less of a relief. And my debut in comedy, I am happy to say, has been wonderfully received.

"I have always possessed the faculty of making people cry. Perhaps it is useful, so I have always played the 'weeping willow' heroines. But there is nothing like the laughter of an audience. It's like a bubble, which we on the stage can feel growing larger and larger, and finally bursting with a great shower."

Miss Herne smiled with us at the elaborate simile.

"Laughter is really like wine to the actors," she went on. "It buoys them up, and inspires them to do their best. There is a certain satisfaction in being able to draw tears, but mirth is infinitely more delightful. I am glad at last to have a chance in a comedy, in spite of my reputation as an injured heroine."

"But don't you think that type of play has been forever disposed of?"

"Perhaps it has. There has been an overflow of mystery melodrama in the past few years, and I think it will be a long time before any producer risks another one. But that type of heroine will be with us always, I'm afraid. I suppose a certain class of the public likes to feel sympathy for such a type, I might even say that they like to indulge in tears. But the "weeping willow" is in demand, and has become a sort of staple among the managers and among the playwrights. I suppose that eventually I'll be doing them again."

"Sad, isn't it?" we remarked.

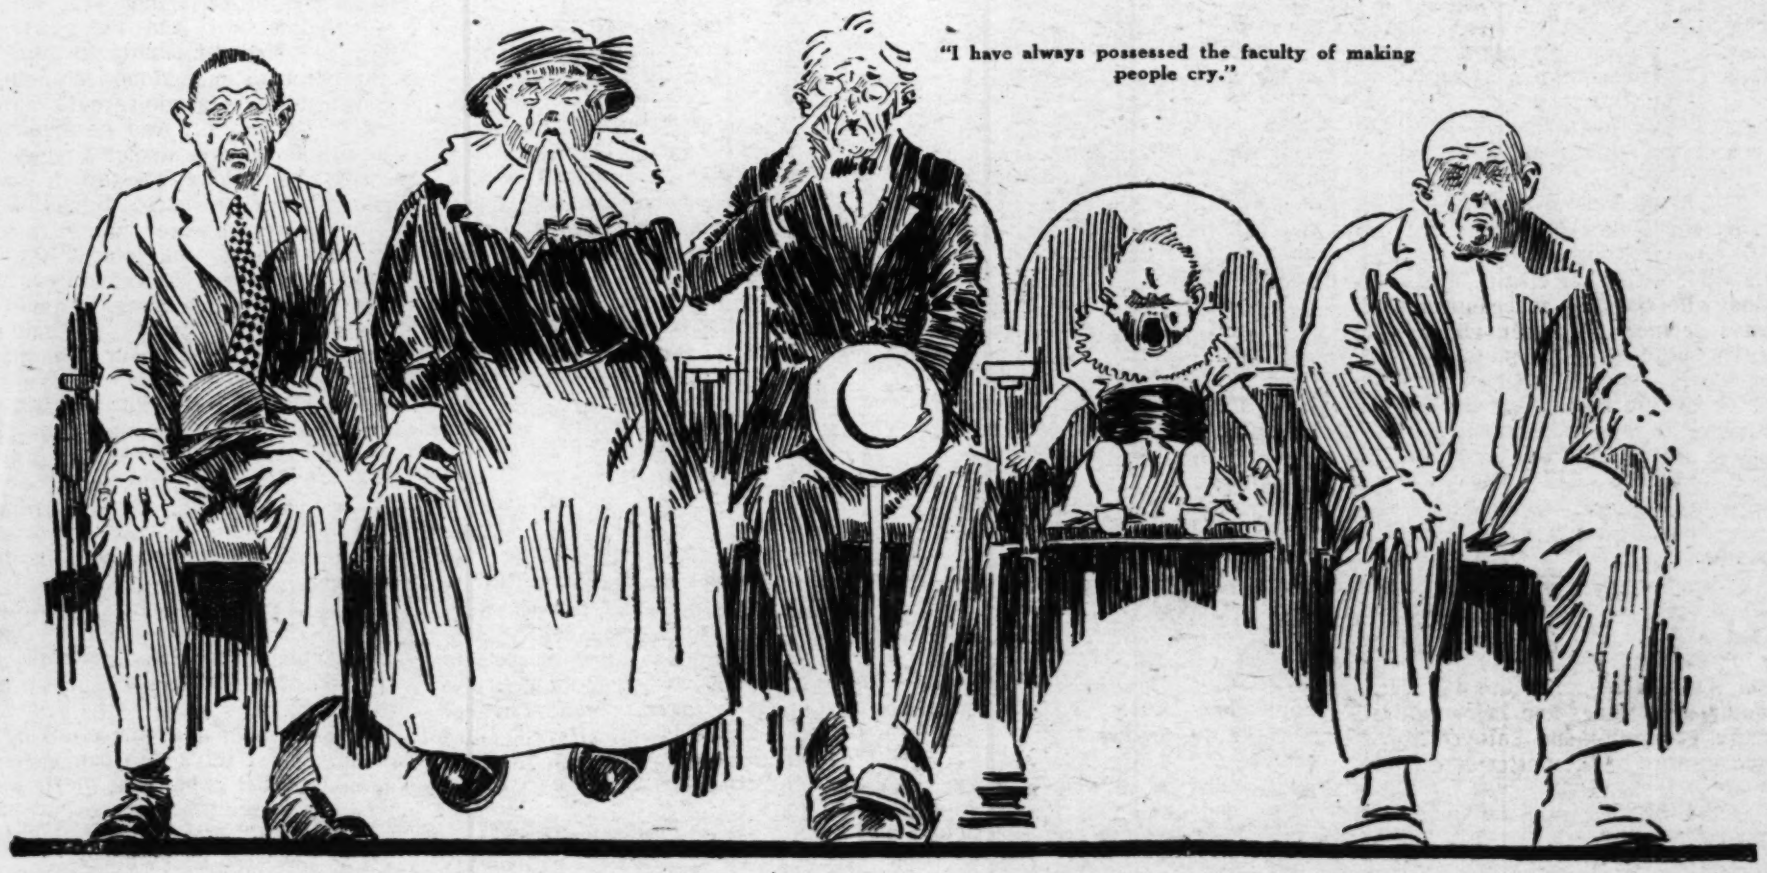

"Oh, quite," answered Miss Herne, sorrowfully. "And now, I'm afraid that I'm due on the stage."

"Just one more question. Do you agree with Miss Crothers, or rather, are you in sympathy with the moral that 'Expressing Willie' teaches?"

"Yes, I believe that the conquest of fear is one of the most important things in life. It is this that makes Minnie so lovable. First we see her as a bashful lily, in which role she may be more or less appealing, but after she has found herself, and realizes that she has something to give to the world, she has learned the true lesson of life.

"I believe in expressing one's self. Not necessarily in the way that the characters of the play do, for they have rather peculiar ways, at which Miss Crothers is obviously poking fun, but after we have conquered fear we may then give what we have to give.

"An inferiority complex is what keeps many of us from getting ahead. This is largely due to self-consciousness—fear of what will happen if we do the wrong thing. Stage-fright, for instance, is an excellent example. Once we are unafraid, we are successful."

"I have always possessed the faculty of making people cry."

Mystery of Lady Crewe's

And How Their Loss Adds One More Link to the Amazing Chain of Misfortunes That Has Wound Itself About This Rich and Fashionable Beauty

A bathing girl on the beach at Cowes, the resort where English society goes every summer to watch King George and other distinguished sailors race their yachts

THE Marchioness of Crewe and the other distinguished guests whom Sir Godfrey and Lady Baring had invited to Nubia House, on the Isle of Wight, for the famous Cowes regatta, were leaving the breakfast room, merrily chatting about their enjoyment of the day before and their pleasant anticipations of the one just beginning.

When Sir Godfrey had to hurry away in his car to complete the arrangements for a yachting trip planned for the afternoon Lady Baring and the guests thought there was no better way of passing an hour or so than by strolling in the delightful gardens that surround Nubia House.

After a few minutes along the garden paths Lady Baring found the sea breeze a trifle too chill in spite of the warm August sun. She excused herself and went back to the house to get a scarf to wrap about her shoulders.

As she descended the stairs from her room on the second floor of the house she was surprised to see a man standing expectantly in the corridor below, just inside the main entrance.

She had heard no bell ring, no servants were in sight and it was very unusual for strangers to call at Nubia House at this or any other hour. For these reasons Lady Baring would have been greatly alarmed had she not noticed how well groomed the man was and how apologetically well bred his attitude as he waited for her to finish her descent of the staircase.

He was not over 30 and was garbed in a double-breasted blue serge lounge coat, white flannel trousers and canvas shoes, all as immaculate and well fitting as the Prince of Wales himself might wear.

The color of his cravat harmonized nicely with that of his eyes and the border of the handkerchief that peeped from his breast pocket. From his gracefully crooked left arm hung a fashionable walking stick. The flower in his buttonhole and the faint smile in which his lips curved were of just the sort to convince Lady Baring that this was a young man of some distinction, one who had some right to be in Nubia House.

Lady Crewe's noble husband looking for game and not for the fashionable thief who walked off with her jewels

And so, stifling her irritation at the carelessness of her servants which compelled her to meet this guest in this very informal way, she marched majestically down the stairs to greet him.

"I beg your pardon," said the visitor in a voice and with a courtly bow which confirmed Lady Baring's favorable first impressions, "I have called to see Sir Godfrey. I have a sort of appointment with him.

"Last winter, at his club in London, he made me promise to come and see him whenever I came to Cowes. I know this is a shamefully early hour to be making a call, but with the yacht racing and everything I thought this might be the best time to find him without intruding too much."

Lady Baring hastened to assure the visitor that her husband had left a few minutes before for the Yacht club, that probably he would not return until time for luncheon. But before she could ask the young man's name or take any message he might have for Sir Godfrey he had fired at her a volley of well bred apologies, marched out of the house and down the steps and hurried to the street along the very garden path where her guests were awaiting her return.

What happened during the next few hours is of no interest to readers of this page. But they will be interested to know what happened when Lady Baring and her guests retired to their rooms to make the changes which the etiquette of Cowes demands before luncheon.

Miss Grace Vanderbilt, the American heiress who was a guest at Cowes when Lady Crewe was robbed; and, on the right, Lady Ludlow, also the recent victim of a mysterious jewel robbery

The early afternoon placidity was shattered by a woman's piercing screams. Over and over again they were repeated, until startled guests and servants hurrying from all parts of the mansion finally reached their source—the room occupied by the Marchioness of Crewe.

"My jewels!" cried Lady Crewe. "My dinner rings, the diamond tiara I brought from India, my pearl necklace, the ruby brooch my husband gave me on my birthday—they're all gone.

"I put them in my jewel case when I retired last night. They were all there this morning, for I took pains to look before I went down to breakfast. And now, where are they?"

THAT was a question nobody could answer as Lady Crewe held up the pathetically empty jewel case that had lain on her dressing table.

The police were summoned, and as soon as they heard Lady Baring's story of the gentlemanly stranger she had seen in the hall they declared he was undoubtedly the thief. The jewels were concealed on him, they believed, while he stood coolly talking with Lady Baring.

This bold robber is thought to have made his way into the house while the guests and their host and hostess were at breakfast. It is hard to believe that he was not familiar with the premises and the habits of the family and servants in order to have been able to enter without being seen.

Lady Baring's unexpected return to the house evidently prevented his escaping by the way he had come, but his nerve was quite equal to the situation created by her appearance on the stairs.

Instead of running away from her, he invented the tale of an engagement with Sir Godfrey. When he saw he had convinced Lady Baring of the truth of this and the entire innocence of his errand he boldly walked out of the front door and across the garden, passing within a few feet of the Marchioness whose jewels he was carrying away.

Sir Godfrey could not recall having ever seen the man whom his wife described. He was positive that he had never had any such conversation in his London club as the suave stranger alleged.

The jewels stolen from Lady Crewe could not be replaced for less than $30,000. They included several of the most admired pieces in her rich collection—one of the finest any English society woman can boast. Two or three of them had sentimental associations which made them almost priceless in her eyes.

The loss of her jewels adds another link to the amazing chain of misfortunes which has long been relentlessly winding itself about the Marchioness of Crewe. In spite of her beauty, her great wealth and her proud position in titled society, she has seemed to be pursued by an evil fate—ever since the night when she was one of a dinner party of thirteen.

As Lady Crewe shudders to recall, it was exactly thirteen years ago that she and her distinguished husband attended a dinner given by Lord Morley, at Claridge's Hotel. The sudden illness of one of the prospective guests left only thirteen to gather around the table.

THE reputed unluckiness of the number was made the subject of a great deal of fun and banter. Neither Lord Morley nor Lady Crewe nor any of the others present took any stock in the superstition, but they welcomed it as an interesting topic for table talk.

Before many weeks had passed, however, the Marchioness of Crewe began to think that perhaps there is some malign influence which pursues anybody who has the temerity to make one of thirteen at a dinner table. Within an amazingly short time she was overtaken by more misfortunes than all her previous life had brought. In many strange ways her life and happiness were menaced.

The day following what Lady Crewe came to believe an ill-omened dinner she was laid low with a severe case of appendicitis. The disease was all the more dangerous because she was within a few weeks of giving birth to her first child, the boy which is now thirteen years old and bears the title of Earl of Madeley.

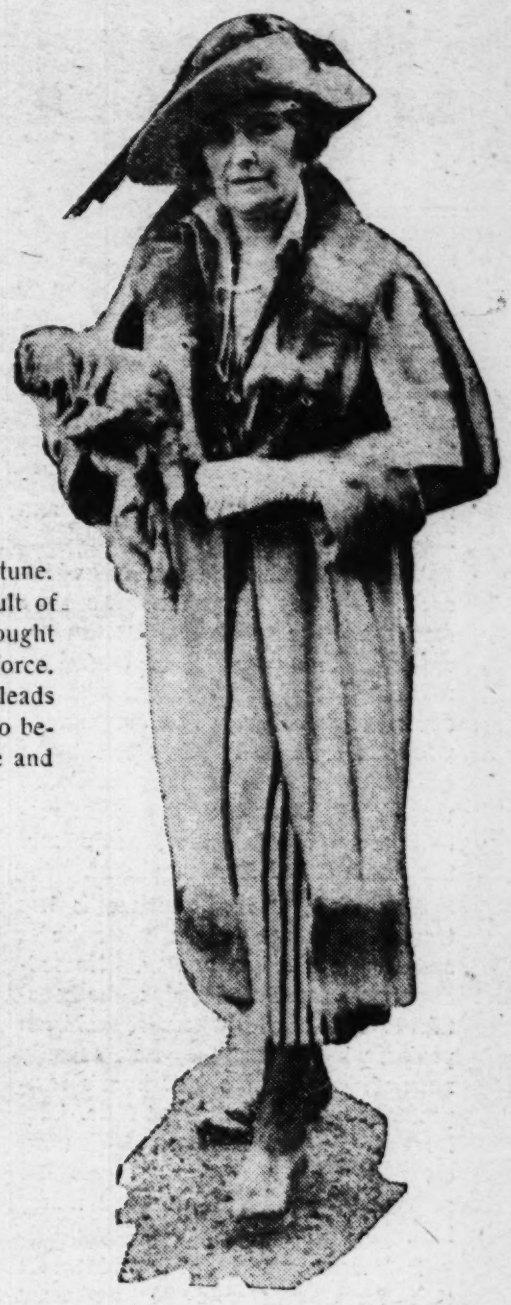

Lady Crewe survived the attack of appendicitis and the operation which relieved it, only to come perilously near death when her son was born. For several weeks the physicians despaired of saving her life.

Before she was able to be about again Crewe House, her old-time mansion in Mayfair, was mysteriously swept by flames. She and her infant child almost perished, being rescued with the utmost difficulty.

The shock did such great damage to Lady Crewe's nervous system that it was two or three years before she was fully recovered and able to resume her activities in society. During this time she was beset with so many misfortunes that finally she developed a horror of the number 13 which has persisted ever since.

On the 13th of the month she refrains from going as much as she can and takes unusual precautions to safeguard herself and the members of her family from accident. Nothing could induce her again to be one of a dinner party of thirteen. She would rather go hungry.

For several years past she has been singularly free from misfortune. If a hoodoo there was as a result of Lord Morley's dinner, it was thought to have spent its malevolent force. But now the loss of her jewels leads her and other superstitious ones to believe that it still persists, and she and her society friends are all wondering whether there are still graver misfortunes in store for her.

Lady Ludlow, also the recent victim of a mysterious jewel robbery.

A few weeks ago a thief broke into Lady Ludlow's London mansion, at the corner of Piccadilly and Bolton street, and made off with rare and historic specimens of jewelry valued at more than $1,000,000. The articles stolen were part of the vast jewel collection amassed by Lady Ludlow's husband, the late Sir Julius Wernher, the Kimberley diamond king.

What makes this robbery so remarkable and mysterious is that it was evidently committed by a connoisseur, a man of taste and culture. He stole only jewels of great historic interest and beauty.

In their present form they could not be offered for sale, because any jeweler or dealer would recognize their origin at once. On the other hand, split up into unrecognizable fragments, they would lose nine-tenths of their present value.

The conclusion seems inevitable that this extraordinary burglar stole the gems simply for the joy of possessing them and gloating over them in secret. He left behind a quantity of enormously valuable emeralds and diamonds and thousands of dollars' worth of solid silver plate, all of which could easily have been sold, in order to seize exquisite old enameled representations of the Saviour and His Passion, onyx cameos of Daphne and Cupid and similar precious antiques.

He would not dare to offer any of these objects to a dealer able to pay a price worth taking, for they are known to everybody in the art world.

Charming and immensely wealthy Lady Crewe, whose friends are wondering what on earth will happen to her next

Playwrights' Plots Outdon

John Drinkwater For Wife for a Younger I Molnar Wins in Just a Substitute for the Was So Happy They

AT LEAST two famous playwrights have no need to look outside the extraordinary romances of their own lives when in search of something unusual in the way of plots —John Drinkwater, the English poet and author of "Abraham Lincoln," "Robert E. Lee" and other successful plays, and Franz Molnar, the Hungarian author of "The Devil" and Liliom."

With a cold deliberation which comes as a shock to those who have read the lofty sentiments Drinkwater expresses in his verses, he turned his faithful wife of eighteen years out of doors. John Drinkwater did this, as was later revealed in court, because he had fallen in love with another man's wife—Daisy Kennedy, the popular violinist and wife of Benno Moiseiwitsch, the distinguished Russian pianist.

Molnar's real life romance is less tragic in its consequences, but quite as amazing in a different way. He suddenly abandoned Sari Fedak, the beautiful love mate with whom he had been perfectly happy until they were actually married, and after a half hour's tempestuous wooing convinced Mlle. Lilly Darvas, the sparkling star of his newest play, that she should forget her promise to her sweetheart and marry him.

Is it any wonder the world thinks that Drinkwater and Molnar need never rack their brains for new plots? The romances in which each of them has figured in real life should furnish them with the material for any number of comedies and tragedies and plays that should outdo in sensational interest any they have yet staged.

Although Drinkwater had from earliest boyhood been keenly interested in poetry and the drama, he started his career as the very modest employee of an insurance company. After several unsatisfactory years in this job he became manager of the famous Repertory Theatre in Birmingham.

In the theater's stock company was a charming and talented actress, Kathleen Walpole. The new manager fell in love with her and in 1906 they were married.

Drinkwater soon began to win fame with his poems. A little later he won still more fame and a great deal of money with his historical plays. By 1920 his income from his work as an author had increased so enormously that he was able to take his wife to London and install her in a fine home in Hampstead. There they lived happily together for about a year.

"Then," sorrowfully testified Mrs. Drinkwater at the trial of her suit for divorce, "my husband began to pay attentions to another woman, but we continued to live in the same house until February, 1922."

Returning home one day, Mrs. Drinkwater was stunned to find a letter from her husband, addressed to her as "My Dear Toby," in which he suggested that they should not live together and told her that he had taken a flat for her elsewhere.

"Did you remove to the flat?" asked the judge.

"Yes," replied Mrs. Drinkwater, with sadness in her voice.

Mrs. Drinkwater said she always loved her husband and wished to have a reconciliation with him. She saw him from time to time. On February 21, 1923, she wrote a letter to him in which she pointed out it was then more than a year since they had lived together and suggested resuming their matrimonial life.

He wrote back, refusing to do so, and said, "I have lived with a lady at the Waldorf Hotel." He inclosed a hotel bill verifying his statement. This was regarded as a cold-blooded hint to Mrs. Drinkwater to start divorce proceedings.

After a very brief hearing the court granted Mrs. Drinkwater her divorce.

It was the first suit brought under the new English law which makes infidelity sufficient ground for divorce whether the suit is brought by a man or a woman. Under the old law when a wife had to sue for divorce, she had to prove, in addition to infidelity, either cruelty or desertion. This new law is England's latest effort to put men and women on an equal footing as regards their responsibility for offenses against the moral code.

MRS. DRINKWATER based her request for a divorce on her husband's relations with an unnamed woman. And everybody was curious to know who could have been the one to win John Drinkwater away from the wife with whom he had lived happily for eighteen years—the faithful comrade of his early struggles and his later success.

The matter was not long a mystery. Soon after Mrs. Drinkwater obtained her divorce, Benno Moiseiwitsch, the celebrated Russian pianist who makes his home in London, sought a divorce from his wife, well known as a violinist under the name of Daisy Kennedy.

And the pianist's suit was based on his wife's relations with the poet and playwright. Daisy Kennedy, according to Moiseiwitsch's allegations, was the woman who had inspired the calm effrontery with which John Drinkwater ordered his wife to hunt up another place to live.

Daisy Kennedy, the well known Australian violinist, who found poetic Mr. Drinkwater much more to her liking than her talented Russian pianist husband

At the trial of his suit for divorce Mr. Moiseiwitsch said that he and his wife were married at Marylebone Registry Office, London, in April, 1914. They lived in Baker Street in London, at Barnes and at Putney.

They had two children, both daughters, and led a very happy and united domestic life until August, 1922, when he had to go on a professional tour abroad. Something happened at or after that time which changed his wife's love for him.

Mr. Moiseiwitsch invited his wife to accompany him on his tour, but she said it would be better for her to stay at home and take care of the children. Therefore he went away alone.

When he returned in December, 1923, he found she had been associating with the co-respondent, John Drinkwater, who was known to him and knew she was his wife.

"After that," said Mr. Moiseiwitsch, "my wife left our house at night and only paid daily visits to see the children."

That way of living went on until January 17, this year, when Mr. Moiseiwitsch received the following letter from his wife:

"Meaburn House, Putney.

"My Dear Benno—This letter may not come as a surprise to you because you know that our married life has been an unhappy one for some years.

"Benno, I want you to give me my freedom, and if you desire to do this you will find the necessary evidence at the Hotel Metropole, Brighton, where I stayed at the end of last week.

"I do implore you not to take the children from me, and I want you to realize that it will surely be better for their health and future welfare if they can be under my care. You must know, Benno, that as a mother I have not failed in love and devotion, and never will do so. So please, please grant me this wish. DAISY."

"Had your life been an unhappy one, Mr. Moiseiwitsch?" asked the plaintiff's lawyer.

"Certainly not," answered the petitioner.

The guilt of Daisy Kennedy and John Drinkwater was established by a waiter from the Hotel Metropole, Brighton, who said that in January last rooms numbered 511 and 512 were occupied by a man and woman. He recognized them as Mrs. Daisy Kennedy Moiseiwitsch and John Drinkwater.

Benno Moiseiwitsch is quite as well known in the world of music as John Drinkwater in that of poetry and the drama. He recently returned to London from a fifteen months' tour of Australia and Africa.

Miss Daisy Kennedy, as she is professionally known, is of Australian birth. She has appeared with success in New York, as well as in London, Vienna, Paris and other European cities. She is about ten years younger than Mrs. Drinkwater.

But neither Daisy Kennedy's youth nor her musical talent can quite explain the way John Drinkwater dismissed his wife. For years the Drinkwaters' union had been regarded as an ideal linking of kindred spirits. It was believed that Mrs. Drinkwater's talent as an actress and her love of poetry had played no small part in her husband's literary success.

WHEN Drinkwater came to America to superintend the production of his play, "Abraham Lincoln," his wife accompanied him. This play has proved the author's biggest moneymaker. In spite of its historical inaccuracies it scored a hit in the United States because of the way it was thought to reveal Lincoln's character. And it has always been supposed that the drama owed much of its success to the help and advice Mrs. Drinkwater gave her husband while he was writing it.

The romance in the life of Franz Molnar is very different from that which has shocked many of the admirers of John Drinkwater's soulful writings—as different as the life of Hungary's capital city and gay Vienna is from that of staid, fog-bound London.

To get the full and rather highly spiced flavor of the story as the gossips of Europe are telling it you have to go back to the obscure Hungarian village where Franz Molnar was born and grew up on his peasant father's little farm.

Franz had to work hard as soon as he was old enough, but with all his weeding of the cabbage patch and other tasks he found plenty of time for frolics with Sari Fedak, the comely daughter of the Molnars' nearest neighbor.

Sari and Franz were of the same age and as well matched in taste and spirit as in years. They walked to and from school together, sat side by side in the classroom, helped each other with their lessons, danced always together at the village fetes.

The connoisseurs of the village thought Sari Fedak its prettiest girl. Franz Malnar, although never outside his native town, thought her the prettiest in the whole world. And of all the boys whose hearts thrilled at sight of Sari's rosy cheeks and laughing eyes there was none she liked so well as Franz.

"Only puppy love," said the Molnar parents, and Sari's father and mother echoed that belief as they smiled reminiscently at the children's fondness for each other. So Sari and Franz themselves thought when, their school days over, they came hand in hand to the first of life's numerous crossroads and —each took a different way.

Years after that quite pangless parting they met—in Vienna. Sari Fedak was achieving considerable success as an actress. Franz Molnar, after many heart-breaking disappointments, was about to have his first play produced, and he had a whole trunk hopefully full of other manuscripts.

Their reunion was celebrated after the theater one night in a lively cafe. While the orchestra wailed the Hungarian melodies they both loved they agreed that they were as fond of each other as they had been in the village days of long ago. From that night they resumed their childhood romance with all the sophisticated elaboration which adult life in Vienna can bring.

That was fourteen years ago. For most of the time since then the Molnars seemed very happy together. Nobody thought of asking them for a marriage certificate, for those documents are not as essential in Vienna or Budapest as in America.

But soon after the Great War's end an avaricious landlord wanted to raise the rent on the apartment where talented Franz Molnar and talented Sari Fedak had lived for a long time. When they objected he called attention to the fact that they were not married.

The lovers promptly took the necessary steps to overcome this objection, but from the moment when the seal of legal conventionality was set on their relations their happiness came to an end. Soon the apartment where they had blissfully lived for so many years became too small to hold them both. Although apparently no other love had come into the life of either, they felt they would be happier apart and so they took separate apartments. But they still were seen frequently together, seemingly as devoted as ever.

When the housing shortage that followed the war became acute some zealous official discovered that Molnar and Sari Fedak, although man and wife, were occupying separate apartments. He insisted that they move into one and thus make room for another family. When they refused he took the matter to court.

But the judge ruled in favor of the happier-when-not-too-much - together lovers.

The Yellow Spider

A Thrilling and

"ALLEE samee you wlite tomollow," the Chinaman insisted blandly. "If Peter Gross no come for his wilfee, the harems of my people are empty."

Grace glimpsed has sardonic leer as he nodded to the two Tibetans. Without a word they grasped her arms and led her to a squalid room with a pallet of straw and unceremoniously thrust her in and bolted the door. One of them stood guard.

At the same moment a curious scene was being enacted on the deck of the Zuyder Zee. The trader, Jim Poggs, had stolen upon John Bright and Vincent Brady a moment before with the startling announcement:

"They've abducted Grace from Fort Wilhelmina. She's a prisoner in Ah Sing's house. One of the Malays just told me—a chap I used to know at Blellang."

He got no further. Vincent Brady, his face ashen-pale, had risen. John Bright grasped his coat, but was too late. With a cry like that of a cougar robbed of her young, Vincent sprang forward and dealt their Chinese guard a staggering blow in the body. The guard doubled and staggered back. Before he could recover Vincent had sprung over the rail into the dark waters of the lagoon.

There were at least a score of witnesses to his mad act. A hubbub arose, paper lanterns began wagging, and native seamen poured over into tambangans strung along the stern of the vessel. The swift craft darted in pursuit. A few moments later they began returning. One of them contained the limp and unconscious body of Vincent Brady. He had been struck over the head with a paddle.

Jim Poggs' prayer that he and the missionary be permitted to attend their wounded comrade was grudgingly granted by the captain of the guard, a kindly disposed Chinaman at heart, but much upset by the occurrence. As the missionary deftly wound a bandage about the lad's head Poggs looked into Vincent's dull eyes and reverently murmured:

"The damn fool! He can't swim a dozen strokes."

IT was an hour before dawn. A silence like that of vacant desert places or high mountain tops lay upon the city that Ah Sing had built in a remote and sparsely inhabited sector of Bulungan residency.

Ah Sing was plotting tonight. Sleep had refused to come to his eyelids. In imagination he already held Peter Gross prisoner. He beheld the resident before him, manacled, aye, heavily manacled, for a man of such prodigious strength was not to be trusted with hands free, Ah Sing knew from experience. He thought of what he would say to his prisoner, the gibes, the taunts, the jeers, words that would cut and lacerate this great, silent man's soul as pincing irons tore the flesh. He rubbed his fat palms in cruel anticipation.

Peter Gross would come, he was sure of that. The maid would draw him White men were that way, heedless of danger, reckless beyond reason, where their women were concerned. He, Ah Sing, knew that. It was a good plan to get the girl first, and thereby attract the greater prize, as a fly is drawn to honey.

Koyala's jealousy had made it easy for him, ridiculously easy. The Chinaman's huge jowls expanded with a grin as he recollected how the Argus Pheasant, in her mad jealousy, had deliberately played into his hands and thereby made it possible for him to get his grip on the man whom she loved with a despairing love that dared not seek expression.

The net was now ready. Ah Sing cogitated. The next step, therefore, was to snare the bird. Peter Gross was wary. But he had provided for that. Tomorrow two chiefs would go, sea Dyaks whom he could trust and whose disloyalty was still unknown at Bulúngan. They would bear a tale to the fort that could not help but draw the resident into the jungle if he loved his maid. After that it would be easy. It was so simple, Ah Sing complimented himself, yet so complete. In its very simplicity lay the assurance of success.

A face pressed against the window. Ah Sing drew back with a start of terror. A flash of contempt came over the features outside. They were a woman's.

"May I come in?" Koyala asked.

Ah Sing nodded toward the door. Summoning a sleepy attendant, he bade the man to let the priestess in. A few moments later she glided along the corridor as silently and sinuously as a snake and entered his room.

"Is it true that Pagu and Lambutan leave this morning with a message for Mynheer Gross?" she demanded.

He surveyed her grimly. Some gabbing fool had betrayed his secret.

"It is true," he announced sternly. "They leave by my command."

"That was not a part of our bargain," she declared steadily.

"It is the will of Ah Sing," he asserted firmly, in an orotund voice that rarely failed to cause the heart of his Malay and Dyak adherents to quake.

"I do not want him harmed," Koyala replied with disarming mildness.

"He shall be judged when he stands before me," Ah Sing replied.

"But I greatly fear he will not stand before thee as a prisoner," Koyala replied.

"What do you mean, Koyala?" he demanded sharply.

"Does the tiger leave its stricken mate?" she asked. "I mean this. Peter Gross is at your gates. If you wish to escape, come with me. But the orang blanda maid goes with us, too," she added viciously. "If you refuse to take her I refuse to show you the path by which alone you can escape."

CHAPTER XVI.

AT the base of a gently sloping elevation, where it drops into the alluvial slough of a sluggish and unnamed stream, Peter Gross halted his little army. The night was pitch-dark around them. They had come many weary leagues through thick and impenetrable jungle during the preceding eighteen hours, but not a man of the little command murmured or asked for a bivouac. There was stern business before them, they knew, and they lusted with all a fighter's keen hunger for the fray, to come to grips with Ah Sing and his crew.

There was a little clearing at the edge of the swamp. In single file the troopers came out of the jungle, springing lightly on the soft turf in spite of their leg weariness. They were hot within, for the abduction of Grace Coston had stirred every man to his inmost depths and roused a savage resolve for rescue and vengeance on the perpetrators.

Captain Carver materialized out of the gloom.

"All here?" he asked in a low voice.

"The sergeants report every man present," Peter Gross affirmed.

"Lkath and his Dyaks and the Javanese under Lieutenant Van Voort will enter the swamp by the north trail at the first faint streak of dawn," Carver announced. "We take the east trail. There's no other way in or out of the town except by sea, Lkath says, and the Prins Lodewyk has them bottled up there. To the west across the river the morass is so deep nothing can get through it."

"Then we've got him," Peter Gross observed grimly. He wiped the cold sweat from his brow and looked anxiously toward the eastern horizon, star-dotted and faintly luminous.

"Fifteen or twenty minutes yet before it starts to dawn," Carver observed, guessing his leader's thoughts.

"About that," Peter Gross agreed. He looked pensively into the somber morass, alive with queer gurgling and nocturnal noises, the tweet and twitter of the birds, the buzz of myriad insect life, the scurrying of rodents and the quaking of miry pools as gas generated in their slimy depths ascended to the surface. "I've waited a long while for this," he murmured prayerfully. "I hope we can end all this trouble and burden tonight."

"By taking Ah Sing?" Carver inquired.

"By taking Ah Sing," Peter Gross assented gravely. "With him eliminated we can have peace. Peace and rest—and a change of scene."

The splendor of a tropic sunrise, streamers of copper and gold flaring to the zenith, was just beginning to appear in the heavens when a sleepy picket at the village gate leaped to his feet as he saw a khaki-clad figure spring out of the jungle and run toward the stockade. The next moment the first shot was fired and the picket, a tall Malay, fell headlong with a queer gurgle into a clump of cogon grass.

With a ringing cheer, Carver's command, his own irregulars in the van, rushed toward the flimsy stockade. It was not built to resist a determined foe, for Ah Sing had not dreamed that he would ever be attacked in his own citadel. He deemed it too securely hid. There was nothing, therefore, to restrain Carver's men from swarming over it and into the streets of the city.

The amazed pirates, leaping to the doors of their houses, were greeted by a murderous fire. Half of them weaponless, except for their krises and spears, lost precious moments looking for their rifles. In this way Peter Gross' forces established a secure foothold in the town before the enemy made any attempt to resist them.

The pirates were of fighting stock. They were a breed sprung from lawlessness and existent only because of a superior tenacity in clinging to life. Moreover, they knew what defeat meant. Consequently they quickly rallied. Leaderless, each man fought for himself and the inviolability of his own dwelling. Some had rifles, some had muskets and some had only bows and arrows or sumpitans, but they fought stubbornly and with a heroism worthy of a better cause.

His forehead bloody from a Dyak spear that had creased the skin as he shot one foe and stabbed another, Carver made his way toward where Peter Gross was leading a section of the attack.

"If we don't move faster than this they may get the cannon they've got on Ah Sing's yacht in action against us," he shouted hoarsely amid the din of conflict.

A few hundred yards ahead of him Peter Gross saw the long house, Ah Sing's residence, standing in the midst of an open square.

"Yonder's where the Yellow Spider sits and spins his webs," he roared to the men round him. "Who goes with me to drive him out?"

A wild yell greeted him. Two-score men, grimed with perspiration and blood from minor flesh wounds, leaped forward at this cry. They swept down the lane in an irresistible tide. The pirates met them with rifle and spear and kris, but for once the ferocity of the Malay and Dyak freebooter was surpassed.

Shooting, bayoneting and clubbing their way through, with the giant form of Peter Gross at the apex of their wedge, they bored a hole through the ranks of their foes and reached the dwelling of the pirate leader.

At that moment there was a sudden volley and shrill cheer from the opposite end of the town. Van Voort and his Javanese, delayed through the inexplicable non-arrival of Lkath and his Dyaks, had finally arrived and taken the pirates in the rear. From the sea coast a mile distant came the heavy rumble of naval guns.

Panic-stricken at this flank attack, disorganized and dismayed at the inexplicable disappearance of their leader, Ah Sing, the pirates broke and fled toward the harbor. Some of them sprang into their proas and tambangans and paddled desperately down the river. Others plunged into the stream, preferring death by drowning to death at the hands of the hated orang blanda.

Taking instant advantage of the break, Carver and his men pressed them hotly, ferreting the snipers out of the houses as they went along. Broken groups made a last, desperate, ineffectual stand on the edge of the morass and on the river's bank and died fighting.

By this time Van Voort's column had worked its way through from the other side of the city and joined Carver's forces. In less than an hour after the battle was begun all resistance had ceased and Ah Sing's citadel was in his arch enemy's hands.

Peter Gross took no part in the fighting after the long house had been achieved. When the pirates broke he sprang toward the nearest door of Ah Sing's dwelling. It was a heavy teakwood affair, solidly constructed, and quite unlike the entrances to the customary Bornean dwelling.

Peter tried the latch and found it locked. Stepping back a few paces he hurled his weight against it. It groaned at the impact. Frantic at the delay, he leaped again with increased impetus, employing all his strength. The door burst from its hinges and he staggered in.

Recovering instantly, he put himself in a posture of defense. He was carrying a pistol in his left hand and a heavy naval cutlas in his right. The gloom was thick around him, for all the windows were barred and shuttered, and the only light came through the broken door.

"Grace?" he called in a high-pitched voice that betrayed the anxiety and anguish that filled him. There was no reply.

He called again. The same stillness followed, the empty echoes of his voice mocking him. Outside the conflict raged. Those who had answered his call to win the long house were apparently under the impression that their leader was still with them, for none of them followed him inside the dwelling. He was alone.

Mysterious Novel . . . . . By John Charles Beecham

He listened keenly. The darkness and the silence were ominous, menacing. It scarcely seemed possible that Ah Sing and all his household had taken flight.

Stepping forward cautiously he approached one of the windows. Tearing the shutters loose he let the light stream in. The room was vacant. It bore every evidence of having been hastily deserted.

"Gone!" he exclaimed bitterly. "He must have been warned. Somebody played traitor."

He went to the next room. Entering cautiously he made his way to the window and removed the blinds. It, too, was empty. The next room was evidently a kitchen. Rice slowly cooking over a brazier, a partially filled dish of fruit, and dough for cakes in a bowl on the table disclosed that the occupants had been interrupted as they were making their morning meal. The attackers had missed capturing Ah Sing by only a few moments.

Peter Gross had no thought, however, of the loss of his coveted prize. That Ah Sing had escaped meant nothing to him at that moment. The anguishing thought that filled him was: "Did Ah Sing take any prisoners with him? Is Grace still in his hands?"

Less cautious now, he ran hastily from room to room, hoping against hope that he might find the girl he sought bound and gagged in some out-of-the-way corner of the rambling dwelling.

As he passed from one darkened room into the semi-twilight of another some instinct, his guardian angel perhaps, caused him to pause on the threshold. What inspired that pause he never knew, for there was no warning sound, not so much as a rustle. But as he hesitated a fraction of an instant on the threshold a great heavy Chinese sword flashed before his face and brushed his sleeve. The point bit deeply into the solid floor.

Thought and action were simultaneous with Peter Gross. Stepping back a pace he fired twice in the fraction of a second. As the sword stood quivering in the floor he leaped forward with his cutlass.

There was no need. With a curious exhalation of breath, like a spent child's tired sigh, one of Ah Sing's huge Tibetan guards slid awkwardly to his knees and dropped face down across the threshold. He shuddered and lay still. There was a crimson stain on his tunic where the bullet had passed through.

Satisfying himself that the man was dead and not shamming, Peter Gross entered the room. It was Ah Sing's reception parlor, where he met his guests and sat in council with his allies, the recreant Dyaks and Malays of Bulungan residency. Stepping forward with extreme caution Peter Gross forced open a window, permitting the bright glare of the morning sun to illuminate the dark corners that had seldom seen sunlight.

The room was empty, like the rest. There were evidences here, also, of a hurried departure; an overturned candlestick, rumpled rugs and chairs out of place. It was evident that the apartment had held but one occupant, and his spirit had just fled across the great divide.

Peter Gross stood by the body of the dead Chinaman a moment and gazed on the grotesque, distorted features. A peculiar, sickening sensation seized him. He perceived how near he had been to death and how Providence alone had intervened to save him. Placing the Tibetan at the door with orders to split the skull of the first man who came through it was Ah Sing's work, he was certain. He perceived the fiendish ingenuity of it. Ah Sing must have guessed that his arch enemy, eager to rescue Grace Coston, would be the first to search the house.

To rid himself of this feeling of nausea and to quiet his nerves he began wandering aimlessly about the room. In a darkened alcove he noticed a wicker basket of oriental pattern and design. There was a garment in it. He glanced at it with vague curiosity and leaped forward. It was the cape Grace had worn the morning she was abducted by the Dyaks.

As his hand was about to close on the garment a suspicious fullness about the folds caused him to draw away. He glanced at it doubtfully a moment and then went back and picked up one of the fallen candlesticks. Holding this at arm's length he gently brushed the garment away from him.

There was a sudden motion below. The ugly pear-shaped head of a cobra rose above the basket, its venomous fangs darting wickedly. With a sweep of his cutlass Peter Gross severed head from body and stepped back.

"I wonder if Ah Sing has any more surprise parties for me?" he asked himself in a voice that strove to be cheerful, but was hoarse and strained. The Chinaman's diabolical ingenuity that exercised itself with planning schemes like these for the assassination of a hated foe in the midst of peril tried his nerves.

CHAPTER XVII.

WHEN the first shot was fired John Bright was beside Vincent Brady's cot and was applying a fresh bandage about the young man's forehead. Brady had a bad cut above the temple, but the wound was not serious unless complications set in. These were always to be feared and guarded against in a tropic climate, the missionary's long experience had taught him. As the shot broke the morning stillness, both lifted startled heads and listened. The opening volley came almost immediately afterward; then the cheers of the white men as they stormed the stockade.

John Bright turned toward Vincent with face illumined.

"Peter Gross is here!" he cried exultantly. "Didn't I say he would come?"

He rose. "Just a moment, please, while I go on deck," he begged.

"I'm going with you," Vincent cried, leaping out of his cot.

"You must not," the missionary remonstrated. "Your wound."

"Hell!" Vincent exclaimed. They rushed on deck together.

The deck was deserted. Looking over the side of the ship, they saw their late guards rowing frantically down the lagoon. At the far end of the lagoon, where it emptied into a tortuous channel running to the Celebes sea, was a small proa with several figures aboard. One was a woman in European dress. Vincent gazed at her intently.

"My God, it's Grace!" he cried agonizedly. "We've got to follow." He ran up and down the deck excitedly, looking for a boat.

"There's a wabbly old tambangan here, with two paddles in her," a voice announced from over the side. "She'll carry four. Can you get the lady?"

It was the trader, Jim Poggs. Vincent cast a single glance at the water to satisfy himself that there was a craft there, and fled below. By this time the fight was on in earnest in the city. Violet Coston, aroused by the uproar, had hurriedly dressed and was fastening her slippers when Vincent called her.

"Hurry," he shouted, "or we'll be too late."

"But I haven't combed my hair, Vincent," she remonstrated.

"Never mind your hair," he pleaded. "But do hurry; it's life or death."

Hearing this, she unbolted the door and rushed outside. John Bright assisted her into the clumsy tambangan. Then he and Vincent in turn sprang into it.

Vincent picked up a paddle, but Poggs peremptorily took it from him.

"I'm captain of this craft," the trader announced belligerently. "You'll abide by my orders. And them orders is to set still and let them who know how to handle this here breed of cantankerous craft handle her."

He offered the paddle he had taken from Brady to the missionary and kept the other himself.

"Where away?" Bright asked quietly.

"Follow the proa," Vincent cried. The proa was at that moment disappearing in the channel.

"Shet up!" Poggs ordered peremptorily. To Bright he announced: "We'll head down-stream after the proa, as I say." Hearing this, Vincent subsided.

Clumsy as the tambangan was, it made good progress in the not inexpert hands of the trader and John Bright. The fighting was still intense when they entered the river. A ship's length ahead the channel turned. There was, of course, no trace of the proa.

Racing down-stream through a wilderness of tropic foliage, with many a crook and turn, they came after a brief half hour's run to a fork in the channel.

"Which way?" Poggs asked as they drifted toward it. The two forks seemed to be of about equal size and taking an equal volume of water. Vincent gazed at them in an agony of indecision.

"We can only trust to chance," John Bright observed quietly.

"Then we'll take the left fork," Poggs announced. With a stroke of his paddle he sent the craft spinning in that direction.

They journeyed on for another ten minutes—hours it seemed to Vincent, who was eating his heart out. He had no word for his lovely companion, who gazed at him with sympathetic eyes. She knew what Vincent was thinking, and knew, too, that it was best that he be left alone with his anxiety and grief.

The channel suddenly narrowed through a dam of fallen trees. As Poggs spied this, he uttered an exclamation of disgust.

"Confound it, we've come the wrong way," he exclaimed. He tried to arrest the progress of the tambangan, but it began spinning. Before he could stop the rotary motion it had run against the dam. Hardly had it touched the trees before half a score of nearly naked Dyaks, running out from the shore and dropping down from the overhanging branches, grasped the vessel.

Violet clung affrightedly to the missionary. She did not scream; danger had been too familiar in the preceding few weeks to cause her to give vent to such a feminine display of feeling. But her blood ceased flowing, for she verily believed that the end had come.

A boyish figure in khaki sprang over a fallen tree on the edge of the shore and grinned at them.

"Hello!" he observed amiably, in perfect English.

"Hello yourself," Poggs retorted. "Will you call off your heathen and give us a hint on where we are?"

"This is part of Peter Gross' outfit," the youth explained. "My name is Paddy Rouse."

In her relief Violet gave vent to a burst of hysterical laughter that was half sobbing. The missionary patted her hand and whispered soothing words in her ear.

"Did you see a proa come through here?" Vincent cried. "A proa with Chinese aboard and a white lady prisoner?"

"Miss Coston?" the surprised youth exclaimed. "No, the proa hasn't come this way. The other is the main channel. If the proa went that way, the Prins Lodewyk will get her. She's lying off the entrance; those were her guns you heard a little while ago. But come ashore."

They accepted the invitation.

"How far is it to the seacoast?" Vincent asked. At this moment a pygmy Dyak warrior, evidently a chief by his trappings, stepped out of the jungle and spoke in guttural Dyak to Paddy Rouse. The latter listened attentively.

"Lkath tells me," he announced excitedly, "that the proa turned into a bayou nearly a mile above here and was left there. Ah Sing and all those with him, including Miss Coston, went into the swamp and are headed north."

"Then I must follow them," Vincent cried.

Rouse spoke to Lkath. The little Dyak shook his head in vigorous negation.

"Lkath says there is no trail," Paddy announced.

"If Ah Sing went that way, I'm

The Yellow Spider

A Thrilling and Mysterious Novel going that way also," Vincent declared vehemently. "I'll follow him to the end of the world, if need be."

Paddy glanced at him curiously. "Your name Brady?" he asked.

"Yes."

"She told me about you," Paddy stated. Intensely loyal to what he deemed Peter Gross' interests, he added: "You'd better come with us and let Peter Gross find her." The hot blood flamed in Vincent's face. "Thanks," he said in a soft voice that trembled in spite of his effort at self-control. "If you don't mind looking after my friends here, and bringing them to your resident, I'll start in search of Miss Coston myself."

John Bright spoke a word of remonstrance, but it was wasted. Before anyone realized what Vincent purposed, he had leaped into the tambangan and swung the craft free. Exerting himself to the utmost, he headed it into the sluggish current.

"Come back, you'll get mired in the swamp," Paddy shouted.

"Come back!" Poggs roared.

"Come back!" John Bright cried imploringly.

"Vincent, come back!" Violet Coston pleaded in a shrill treble that carried farther than any other voice.

But Brady was deaf to these cries. Wielding the paddle desperately, though awkwardly, he drove the heavy boat against the stream and widened the distance between himself and those he had left behind. The last they saw of him was when the tambangan rounded the point ahead.

"All we can do," Paddy observed, "is to get back to Peter Gross at once and report. We have no boats. Mynheer Gross will probably have to send out a rescue party."

Vincent was soon wearied. It taxed his strength to drive the boat against the current, and the rising sun added to his discomfort. It seemed to him he had gone several miles, instead of the one mile Paddy had specified, before he discovered a rift in the jungle wall. Driving the tambangan through it, he perceived a bayou or lagoon ahead. At the upper end lay a deserted proa, the very craft that had left Ah Sing's harbor a short time before.

Paddling desperately, he crossed the lagoon and ran alongside the proa. A hurried examination disclosed that there was no one aboard. The reeds on the shoreward side of the proa were trampled down, indicating that a large party had gone ashore. A plain trail led into the morass.

Vincent wasted no time on the proa. Although weaponless, he plunged boldly into the swamp. Winding around the mangroves, through sedges and tall clumps of cane, over fallen tree trunks, into stretches of jungle where the thick growing liana formed an almost impenetrable barrier, and among boggy dells where the deceptive soil disappeared under foot, the trail led steadily deeper into the primeval tropic wilderness.

It was a land of mystery and silence, of nocturnal shades and ghostly rustlings that Vincent found. The air was heavy and oppressive. The unending morass quaked and groaned. Loathsome stenches and clouds of pestilential insects rose from it. Great spiders lurking in their webbed warrens watched him struggling through the undergrowth, and little striped and spotted snakes glided across his path.

Invisible presences seemed to tenant the brooding forest. Vincent thought at times he felt the brushing of their ghostly wings. In every thicket and in every clump of grass he suspected a lurking foe, and he kept looking fearsomely back lest a tiger stalk him unaware. Yet he pressed on.

The trail ended at the margin of a little stream. Vincent looked across and saw no break in the solid wall of mangrove roots. Pads of water hyacinths fronted the trees. There was not a broken stem or torn leaf to mark the passing of a human. Upstream and down-stream the same solid wall ran.

Vincent stared at it in despair. It was obvious that one of two things had occurred. Either the fleeing Ah Sing had entered the stream here to hide his trail by water, or he and his party had left the trail by some fork which Vincent had passed in his haste.

For a moment despair gripped the young man's heart. Whatever course he took, there were two chances to one that he would be in error. To be lost in the swamp meant certain death. But, worse than this, in Vincent's estimation, was the fact that if he missed the trail now, Ah Sing would escape into the interior with his precious prize.

He paused uncertainly on the brink of the stream. Which way should he go, up or down? He instantly rejected the alternative of going back to investigate whether Ah Sing and his party had left the main trail.

Meanwhile the sun climbed steadily higher. The heat became intolerable. Not a breath of air stirred in the swamp, and the perspiration poured down Vincent's body. His throat seemed on fire, but he dared not drink the muddy, malarial waters of the brook. Great clouds of mosquitoes and flies settled on him, and, although he fought desperately, he could not ward them off. He grew dizzy with the heat, but struggled doggedly on.

On a little knoll, in the shade of a clump of stunted marsh conifers, Vincent stumbled and fell and did not rise again. Exhausted nature could do no more. He had given his last ounce of strength. The flies and the mosquitoes swarmed over him. The vulture settled in a near-by tree, waiting until the stings of myriad insects and the increasing heat should write the final chapter in this oft-repeated tragedy of the Borean swamps.

Thus Koyala found him.

She brushed the flies and mosquitoes away, an instinctively feminine act and not due to an impulse, for she felt no kindness toward this member of the hated white race. The mystery of his presence in the heart of the almost impenetrable morass roused her curiosity. Entering the forest, she returned a moment later with a large nepenthes. It held over a pint of pure, clear water, sweet and cool. Forcing open his lips, she let some trickle down his throat. The balance she permitted to run over his fevered forehead and temples. Vincent gasped and opened his eyes. He struggled to rise, but fell back exhausted. He gazed vacantly at the somber, green foliage overhead and then turned toward Koyala. An interrogative light struggled to find expression in them.

"Where am I?" he gasped. He looked around uncertainly. "Oh, the swamp. But where's Grace?"

At the mention of her hated rival's name a crimson flood rushed to Koyala's face. The spark of womanly sympathy that had been aroused in her at the plight of the helpless lad she had found fled on the instant. "So this is another of her victims," was her instant thought. "Let him die here in the woods; let the vultures and the flies quarrel over his remains."

Vincent, struggling to rise and resting on one elbow, looked eagerly at Koyala. "I'm looking for a lady, Grace Coston. She is a prisoner of the pirate, Ah Sing. Can you help me find her?" he implored.

"Why should I help you find her, orang blanda?" Koyala inquired harshly in excellent English.

A light of understanding came upon Vincent's face. "You are the Argus Pheasant," he cried. "You can help me. Help me, I beg you, help me find her!"

"Why do you want to find her?" Koyala demanded cynically.

"Because she is my promised wife," Vincent replied.

Koyala started. Her keen, coal black eyes searched the young man's face. It expressed absolute candor and sincerity, and there was a beseeching look in the eager eyes that tugged sharply at the priestess' heartstrings.

"Grace Coston will wed the resident of Bulungan," she answered in a dry, matter of fact tone.

Vincent glanced at her in surprise. "Grace Coston will marry me," he returned firmly.

"Grace Coston will marry Peter Gross if she escapes Ah Sing," she repeated. "But she will not escape Ah Sing," she declared, an exultant tone in her voice betraying her.

Vincent struggled gamely to his feet. He tottered weakly, and clung to the low branches of the pines for support. The vulture rose regretfully from a neighboring tree and flew away.

"That is an untruth, because Grace Coston will marry me," he asserted tensely. "And I will save her from Ah Sing."

Koyala's lips curved with scorn.

"Do you think you could take her away from Ah Sing and those who are with him, orang blanda?" she asked contemptuously. "You have neither the strength nor the wit to find your way out of this swamp."

Vincent pulled himself together bravely. "I will find a way," he declared. "If you will not help me, priestess, I must go alone."

He stepped forward uncertainly a few paces. Letting go the branches of the screw pines, he labored across the narrow clearing. Twice in that space he lifted his hand dazedly to his head. As he approached a clump of sedges his foot caught in a projecting root and he fell heavily. The swarm of flies and insects gathered around him again.

Koyala, who had been watching him, waited uncertainly a moment. Her hatred of the white race and all its members had never been so keen. She belived them all faithless, cruel, thinking only of self. It lay within her heart to avenge the injuries done her by white men, for insult and contumely suffered in silence, for neglect and silent scorn, by plunging a dagger into the heart of this young man and leaving him there. Had it not appeared that the sun and the insects would save her adding his death to her account, she might have done so, she felt.

Yet he made a powerful appeal to her. He loved this smooth skinned, white faced maid, this fickle jade who had twisted Peter Gross around her finger as the basketmaker twists his reeds, who had made him foolishly dream of leaving Bulungan and following her across the water. Aye, he loved her, or would not follow her thus, when exhausted nature could do no more.

"Water," Vincent moaned, stirring slightly.

As she heard that pitiful plea, Koyala's doubts and irresolution vanished in an instant. Hurriedly getting another pitcher plant, she again chased the noxious insects away and helped him to drink.

As he struggled to rise she bade him to remain still, and gave him a portion of a palm leaf with which to keep the insects away. She constructed in an incredibly short time a crude shelter where he could rest in comfort.

"But I can't wait—I must go on," Vincent expostulated when he perceived her intention.

"You must rest until after the siesta hour," Koyala declared inexorably. "An hour before sundown we shall leave here. I will guide you out of the swamp and to Ah Sing's camp. We will rescue the woman you love together. You cannot do it; I can. Therefore you must do as I direct."

The morning's struggle through the morass had eradicated all Vincent's stubbornness. He knew the limit of his powers; so that what Koyala saw was a boyish smile of willing resignation.

"I am your dutiful servant, princess," he declared.

CHAPTER XVIII.

Grace knew Koyala was their guide. She caught a glimpse of the priestess as they left Ah Sing's house in the faint, gray dawn. She saw her again when they left the proa to enter the swamp. The presence of the half-white, half-Dyak girl gave her confidence. From the brief acquaintanceship she had with Koyala she intuitively felt that the latter would not resign her to an awful fate with Ah Sing.

When late in the afternoon they reached a deserted village, and a Chinese guard roughly bade her come out of the palanquin, Grace looked around for their fair guide. But Koyala was not to be seen. At first Grace thought the priestess had left the camp temporarily and would return. But when the shadows began to thicken and there was no sign of her, fear began to grip Grace's heart for the first time that day.

Upon Ah Sing's instructions she was thrust into a vacant hut and a Chinaman stationed at her door. Fortunately he knew a little English. Grace asked him where Koyala had gone.

He shrugged his shoulders. "No tellee," he grunted. "She-um Koyala go 'way blime-by big piece back in woods."

Grace's face became ashen pale. She was alone, then, and at the mercy of this band of savages. The thought stunned her and she shrank into the darkest corner of the hut. At every footstep passing by she trembled.

As night came on, lights began to appear in the camp. Ah Sing evidently deemed himself safe from pursuit. But there was no light in Grace's hut. She sat in darkness on the floor of the dwelling, the prey of an unending nightmare.

When the night advanced the fires died down and the pirates stretched themselves on reed mats and went to sleep. But sleep was far from Grace's eyes. She listened with quaking heart to every sound.

It was past midnight when drowsiness finally began settling upon her tired eyelids. They dropped lower despite her effort to keep awake. Like a tired child she finally sank to rest on one of the foul mats that covered the floor of the hut.

A sensation akin to an electric shock suddenly caused her to bolt upright from a deep sleep and gaze around affrightedly. She thought she had felt the touch of a human hand upon her own. Rigid, and every sense acute, she waited and watched and listened.

"Are you awake?" a sibilant whisper sounded close to her ear.

"Koyala!" Grace gasped in excess of relief.

"S-h!" the voice cautioned. "The guard may hear you. Can you follow me without making any noise?"

"Yes," Grace whispered breathlessly.

"Hurry, then. We have no time to lose."

Grace perceived that a small aperture had been cut in the rear of the hut. There was a rustle, then a human form obscured the dim patch of light. It disappeared almost instantly, gliding through the opening as sinuously as a snake. Grace followed, holding her breath lest she be heard.

As she came into the open, Koyala grasped her hand and pulled her into the shadows. The priestess waited a moment, listening intently, then stepped warily around the hut. There were several others, standing in a row, and she led Grace around the rear of them. At the end of the lane a low fire was burning and a Dyak squatted before it, with his spear between his legs. His back was turned toward them.

With a finger of warning upon her lips Koyala led Grace stealthily around the edge of the dangerous zone of light to a clump of shrubbery.

"On your hands and knees now," she directed. Grace obeyed. They crawled in this way several rods, till they gained the shelter of a thicket. Koyala rose and plunged boldly into the somber forest, black as a mining shaft. Stifling her doubts and her fear, Grace followed.

When they were some distance from the camp, Koyala led Grace into a little glade where the moonlight was playing hide-and-seek through the treetops.

"There is a question I must ask you," the priestess declared, confronting the girl she had rescued. "Is it true that in Ah Sing's camp there was held as prisoner a young man whom you are to marry?"

"Yes. Was he saved?" Grace asked anxiously.

Koyala paused. She waited until the moonlight fell upon Grace's face, and then announced abruptly:

"He is here. He is waiting for you."

"Vincent here?" Grace cried rapturously. "Where?"

The suspicion that had blighted Koyala's life since she first saw Grace Coston's face fled at the sound of that cry. She gazed at Grace incredulously for a moment, as though unable to conceive that any woman could prefer another before Peter Gross, but the girl's joy illumined features scattered every doubt. The sullen distrust, the rancor and the hatred that had soured her existence for days disappeared from her heart. Her eyes moistened. A sense of guilt and shame at the hardship and misery she had caused this frail member of her sex smote her. She burned with eagerness to make amends. The transition from distrust to loyalty, from hate to affection, took place in a moment before Grace could repeat her question.

"A few steps farther," Koyala cried, grasping Grace's hand and pulling her forward in her own eagerness to reunite the lovers. They walked less than a hundred yards, when they came to the bank of a small streamlet. Koyala uttered the weird and peculiar cry o. the argus pheasant. A form detached itself from the gloom.

"Grace?"

"Vincent!"

They were in each other's arms. Koyala turned aside, eyes smarting with tears.

"We must hurry," she announced finally, interrupting their lovemaking. "Ah Sing will find Miss Coston missing at dawn. He will send men in pursuit. They will overtake us unless we hasten, for you cannot travel swiftly through the forest as I do."

"Lead the way, juffrouw," Vincent replied. "We will try to keep pace with you."

Dawn found them in the midst of the jungle, but half way to Ah Sing's city, where Peter Gross and his forces remained encamped. Grace was exhausted. The strain of the last few days, coupled with the fact that she was neither dressed for nor accustomed to jungle travel, told on her cruelly. Her arms and hands were torn and bleeding from contact with thorns and briars. Vincent was in little better shape, for he had not yet recovered from his exhausting experiences of the morning. Koyala perceived their condition.

"We cannot go farther," she announced quietly. "It is impossible for us to reach Mynheer Gross before our pursuers overtake us. We must hide. There is a ruined temple tower near by; it was built by the Mongol conquerors who came here ages ago, so long ago that none of my people know aught of their stay in this land except the chief priest. My grandfather Chawatangi told me the story of this tower and showed me how one man can hold it against a hundred. We must tarry there until rescue comes."

"We are in your hands, juffrouw," Vincent replied. Koyala started, wondering that he should speak so much like Peter Cross. They were largely cast in the same mold, she decided. But Peter Gross was by far the greater character.

The tower was a masonry structure, about thirty feet high. Where the bricks came from, and what story they might have told, was a thought that occurred to Vincent as they approached the building, but he dismissed it for a more convenient season. The jungle grew thickly around it, the creepers and vines crawling through the open door and up the stairway, fastening their tendrils into the decaying rubble. Before she permitted them to approach it, Koyala lifted the vines aside and drove a family of vipers out of their nest in a pile of fallen bricks.

With Vincent assisting her, Grace made her way up the ancient stair. The bricks were worn in the center. Myriads of naked feet had trod those stairs in other centuries to offer gifts to unknown gods. The race and religion had both vanished, leaving only a lone tower buried in the jungle.

The stair seemingly ended in a ceiling. But as Koyala, who was in advance, came within reach of the ceiling, she pushed upward. A flag of stone began to revolve, opening the way for them. Koyala went above.

"There is naught here but some nests. You may come up," announced. Vincent and Grace followed her. They found themselves in a small room about ten feet square. There were two small circular openings in the wall that served as windows.

"We may have to hide here for several days," Koyala announced. "I shall get fresh water and food."

She disappeared and came back a little later with several pitcher plants. Vincent offered to assist, but she sharply directed him to remain where he was.

On her next trip Koyala brought with her cocoanuts, plantains, durians and bread-fruit. She left again, but was absent only a short time.

"Silence," she warned. "Ah Sing is coming. I saw the Datoo Njan only a moment ago crossing the stream a little below here."

Grace's hand crept fearsomely toward Vincent. His palm closed over it.

"I am afraid they heard your voices," Koyala whispered regretfully. "Sounds from this tower carry a long way. I should have warned you, but I did not think they were so near. Ah Sing must have discovered that you were gone before sunrise, Miss Coston."

"How can we defend ourselves?" Vincent asked.

"I have my dagger," Koyala responded. "I shall sit by the stone. Those that try to enter will die."

"Let me take it," Vincent asked. "It's my place."

Koyala's lips curled scornfully. "You forget that I am a daughter of the jungle, mynheer," she replied. "Hush!"

They heard a low, rustling sound below. Someone was coming through the liana and cane toward the tower. They waited breathlessly. Koyala quietly glided toward the stone and squatted next to it.

A murmur of guttural voices came to their ears. Presently they heard a sharp order in deep, guttural tones. Grace shivered.

Someone began mounting the stairs warily, a step at a time. He prodded the stone flag with his spear. Koyala held it in place by the simple expedient of sitting on it. Satisfied, the pirate retreated and reported to his chief.

There was a torrent of guttural abuse from Ah Sing. At his command three of his followers mounted the stairway and strove to budge the stone. Their united effort was unsuccessful, for Vincent had added his weight to Koyala's. The stone gave slightly under the impact of their blows, however, revealing that it was being held in place by someone above.

There was a satisfied grunt from those below as this fact was established, and they hastily decamped and reported to Ah Sing. An interval of waiting followed. Vincent stole to the window and peered out.

"They're getting a log to use as a battering-ram," he announced excitedly. Koyala nodded. She indicated to Vincent that he take her place beside the stone for a moment. When he did so she stole to the window and glanced out.

"They are all Malays and Chinese," she announced disappointedly as she returned. "I had hoped that there would be some of my people among them. They would have listened to me."

She took her place again beside the stone and waited.

There was a crashing at last of a heavy object pulled through the cane. The creepers were pulled away below and the length of log placed on the stairway. Several of the strongest finally seized the log and hurled it against the stone flag. It gave way instantly, for Koyala's weight was no longer above it, and the log shot through. Expecting resistance, the pirates were wholly unprepared for this. They let go the log to save themselves from falling. As it fell back it rolled them down the stairs like so many ninepins. Bruised and limping, and uttering fierce curses in every language of the Malay archipelago, they walked away.

A storming party instantly took their places. Led by the Datoo Njam, they leaped up the stairway. As the datoo's head rose above the level of the floor he saw the priestess Koyala sitting on her knees with uplifted dagger. Even as he recognized her the dagger shot forward like a snake's fangs and pierced his temple. He fell back with a groan.

There was a yell of anger from the pirates. The next man clutched at the figure sitting above and received a thrust through the hand. Uttering an oath, he let go and dropped. The third was warier and shot a spear through, but Koyala was prepared for this maneuver and dodged the steel point. At the same time she ripped the pirate's arm open from shoulder to wrist. The pirates paused, and the stone slipped back into place.

Koyala was breathing hard, but her eyes were dancing. The fierce joy of conflict was upon her. In defending Grace and Vincent she felt she was making amends for the suffering she had caused them.

The pause was only momentary. The stone suddenly lifted and three spears shot through. Before Koyala could draw back one of them penetrated her shoulder. Those below caught their first glimpse of her. A fierce shout—"The Bintang Burung"—rent the air.

"Pull her down, drive a spear through her!" Ah Sing yelled, mad with rage at what he deemed her treachery. "Are you all afraid of one woman? Hing Ho, go in there and pluck that she-devil down from her perch for me. Go!"

The big Chinese guard who was addressed sprang up the stairway. Thrusting his sword upward unexpectedly, he drove it into Koyala's side. A low moan of pair came from her, and she partially collapsed. A huge yellow claw reached through to pull her down.

Chafing under inaction, Vincent saw what was occurring. Leaping forward, he caught the Chinaman's hand and gave it a sudden backward wrench. The Chinaman was unprepared and toppled backward. At the same instant Koyala rallied and pulled herself together.

"Let me take your place," Vincent pleaded. Her face was deathly pale, an olive paleness, but she smiled bravely and shook her head in negation.

Vincent spied a chipped piece of rock weighing about four pounds in the dust in one corner. Inspiration came to him, and he leaped forward and seized it. When he turned two spears were threatening Koyala and two Malays reached out to drag her down. As she drove her dagger into the face of one, slitting his cheek open, Vincent drove his rock into the other's features, crushing them in. Both Malays dropped back. Vincent instantly turned the stone on its pivot and threw his weight on it.

"You are wounded," he said. Koyala's sarong was stained with blood.

"It is not serious," she said faintly. "We must surrender or you will die! You need help!" he cried. He tried to lift the stone, but she placed her knee on it.

"I forbid!" she cried. "Do you think they will help me? They will leave me here to die! They are not my people."

Vincent hesitated. In the pause Grace stole to the window.

"They are bringing up reeds and brushwood!" she cried in warning. Koyala's face became still paler.

"They mean to smoke us out!" she exclaimed.

"Will the smoke come through?" Vincent asked. She nodded affirmatively.

"Had we better give in now?" he inquired.

"Is it your desire?" she asked.

"Personally—no. There is always a chance."

"We will wait," she replied simply.

There were no more rushes. The Malays piled brushwood and reeds on the stairs. Presently they heard the crackling of flames. A puff of smoke came through the interstices between the flag of stone and the masonry. It was quickly followed by another.

The Malays threw a blanket of damp marsh grass on the flames. The thick smoke bellied upward and poured through the cracks.

"This is the end," Vincent coughed, half strangled.

There was a ringing cheer outside. Indistinguishably mingled with it was a savage yell of dismay. Almost at the same instant a crashing volley reverberated around the walls of the old tower.

Koyala was lying face down on the stone flag. Vincent crawled toward her and tried to pick her up to bring her to the window, but her weight was too much. All he could do was to pull her off the stone.

The smoke lessened as willing hands below scattered the fire. Shod feet clicked on the brick of the ancient stair and strong hands, grimy but undeniably white, forced up the stone. The first man to [illegible] through the aperture was Peter Gross. He found Grace Coston, the American heiress, Koyala Bintang Burung, priestess of the Dyaks, and Vincent Brady lying side by side. They were tenderly lifted down to the sweet air below.

When Grace revived a few moments later she found Vincent leaning over her.

"Vincent!" she cried.

"My love!" he exclaimed, folding her in his arms.

Peter Gross turned aside with a sigh. His promise had been redeemed. Also, a chapter in his life was over. He crossed to where Koyala lay. Captain Carver was roughly dressing her wound. Peter slipped an arm under the unconscious girl's head to assist the captain. A momnet later she opened her eyes. When she saw him a light of unearthly happiness glowed in them.

"I knew you would come, mynheer," she whispered weakly.

Captain Carver was uncovering her side where the Chinese guard's sword had bit through. Peter Gross gulped when he saw the wound and her garments satured with blood.

Koyala gazed fascinatedly at the dripping garments they took from her. Suddenly her fingers reached weakly out for Peter Gross' hand and pressed it lightly.

"See, mynheer," she whispered faintly, "I am all white now. My mother's blood is bled from me!"

CHAPTER XIX.

WHILE Peter Gross and Captain Carver were seeking to stanch the rapid flow of blood from the terrible wound in Koyala's side, Lieutenant Van Voort and his Javanese were scouring the jungle for the fleeing Malays and Chinese. Ignorant of the fact that Ah Sing had commanded the party in person, they did not press the search with as much ardor as they might have until a badly frightened datoo, on being questioned, admitted that the pirate chief himself had been their leader.

Van Voort instantly put out his entire force to beat the jungle, but the delay had given the Chinaman sufficient time to escape. When it became apparent later in the day that the pirate leader had successfully eluded pursuit, Van Voort called his men together, and returned, much chagrined, to headquarters at Ah Sing's city.

In the meantime Koyala had been borne with all tenderness to the same place. Upon their arrival there, Captain Carver made a more careful examination of the wound. His face was grave when he turned to Peter Gross, who was standing by, awaiting the verdict.

"She has lost a great deal of blood," he announced. "It will be a miracle if she lives. The only hope for her is to get somewhere at once where she can get the best medical attention and care."

"The nearest hospital is at Batavia," Peter Gross observed.

"Yes."

"You think she ought to go there?"

"If it could be arranged."

"Order a proa at once," the resident directed. "I am going to commandeer the Prins and take Koyala with me to Batavia. I shall leave you in charge. Please explain the situation to his excellency. He will understand."

Carver nodded and withdrew, leaving the resident with the maid. All Koyala's nervous, tempestuous energy had vanished. She looked very frail indeed as she lay on the rude couch gasping painfully for breath. Each inhalation was like a knife stab to Peter Gross. He felt that he was responsible for her condition. Had he not neglected her to enjoy Grace Coston's company, he told himself, Koyala would not have done as she did.

He remembered that Sachsen, Carver and the governor general had called her traitorous, and he had not come to her defense. Aye, he had almost been persuaded himself of her treachery. A poignant sense of shame filled his heart.

Koyala was carried very gently to the rude wharf and lowered into the proa. She knew nothing of the journey, for Captain Carver had administered an opiate. When she opened her eyes she was in the commander's room of the Prins Lodewyk, and Peter Gross was sitting beside her. As he noticed her eyes glance bewilderedly around the room the resident smiled.

"You must not talk," he said. "We are taking you to a hospital at Batavia. where you shall receive the best of care."

"They are safe?" she whispered weakly.

He knew to whom she alluded. "I expect that they are probably back to Fort Wilhelmina by now," he replied. "They saw us off and begged me to express their gratitude to you. Miss Coston told me how you rescued her. She says she will always feel that she owes not only her life but something infinitely more precious to you. I think they will be very happy."

"It was all my fault," Koyala gasped wretchedly.

"You are a wonderfully brave and patient girl, and I was a fool!" Peter Gross contradicted. "They all admire and love you. But we must not talk any more. You must save your strength."

Koyala smiled pathetically.

"You are very good to me, Mynheer Gross," she said.

The Prins Lodewyk made a record run to Batavia. Koyala was removed to a hospital where the jungle-bred maid, whose only contact with civilization had been a boarding pupil's life at a mission school, enjoyed once more the luxury of clean linen and a soft bed.

Peter visited her daily. In fact, he spent hours at the hospital. The nurses came to watch for him in the morning after they had completed their customary ministrations to the patients. They wove strange romances about the tall, handsome young giant and the dusky maid of wondrous beauty whose eye followed his every motion so slavishly.

But none of their tales approached in bizarreness the true story of these twain. Koyala's identity was kept a strict secret, and Peter was careful to avoid giving any clew to his residence. It was commonly assumed that Koyala was a Hindu princess of rank, a raja's daughter, and Peter a British-Indian official.

Koyala's convalescence was slow. Her terrible loss of blood sapped her vitality, and only her marvelous con-

"Now you have your scene set. You know Eunice and you know Howard. You know what Eunice thinks of Howard, this mixture of God and brute. 'Women have never meant much to him,' she told me. 'He says he doesn't khow what to talk to them about. Of course, one doesn't see them much in the wilds, not nice ones, I mean,' and she blushed a little as she thought of the 'Playthings of pleasure' —perhaps she even thought a little wistfully that it would be nice to be a plaything."

"But, Margaret, I don't know what Howard thought of Eunice."

"That was what I was coming to. He hadn't thought of Eunice."

"That is what I was coming to. He hadn't thought about her much. She was, he knew, rich and he liked motors and cigars. Beggars couldn't be choosers, and even if she did pay the piper, she wasn't likely to call much of a tune. She was a nice little thing —rather quiet without much to say for herself, and, by golly, it wasn't every one who could make pots of money simply by sitting down and writing. Of course, she wasn't young or pretty, but one couldn't expect everything, and, my hat, wasn't she gone on him?"

"Good God, Margaret, did he really talk like that?"

"Of course, he did—and you see he knew nothing, absolutely nothing. How was he to guess about the marble palaces? The house at Godalming was a nice, comfortable place. The garden was pretty, too, and he would buy a billiard table.

"From the day she became engaged Eunice was to those who didn't know her, transformed—actually, of course, she was simply turning herself inside out. Her exterior Godalming life ceased to exist. She insisted on going to Paris, on buying furs and clothes, and jewels. In the evenings she would try them on in a vast cage of looking glasses. 'How do you think one wraps herself into this ermine cloak, dear,' she would ask. 'If I hold it negligently as the mannequin did, it drops off, and yet clutching it doesn't look right at all.'"

"All of these difficulties have been so easily surmounted by Clare and by Pearl. They had simply not arisen. 'I suppose it is all a matter of practice,' Eunice consoled herself. But, sometimes she got very depressed. She would remember all of the descriptions of her various heroines—and yet, none of them seemed to fit. Where was the languid haughty assurance of Clare, where the wistful flowerlike loveliness of Pearl? Eunice did so long to be quite at home with cigaret holders and vanity cases. 'I know Margaret dear, you never powder in a restaurant—you don't like the looks of it in public—but aren't you just a little bit old-fashioned? One ought to be able to, oughtn't one?'"

"I have never spent a more miserable ten days in my life—never before did I know what the word poignant really meant. Eunice was heart rending — elated at one moment, desperate the next, beginning each day eager and hopeful, and ending it tired and discouraged. 'I think some of my things will turn out well,' she would say tremulously, but I have never in my life seen any one who succeeded to the extent that she did in looking as if her clothes were cutting her. There never seemed to be any sort of relation between her and what she was wearing. 'Howard loved you so much just as you were,' I would say to her—'You mustn't go home too different.' Of course, I know it is me myself that he loves,' she would agree, smiling happily. 'He would love me in rags — indeed, I know he wishes I were poor so that he should be able to work hard for me. But I think one ought never to forget that it is a wife's duty to be the plaything of her husband's pleasure.' So it had come to that — I was appalled. Her life really was to be led in the grand manner of 'Wax Flowers' and 'Clare's Calvary.'"

"'Do you think one has the right to refuse oneself to one's husband?' she asked me one day. 'I think perhaps one has, but, of course, I wouldn't be a bit surprised at his insisting.' It was curious the way that Eunice hungered for force."

"And when you got back from Paris?"

"We were met at the station by Howard and the new motor car that she had ordered as a present for him. He really was impressed: 'By Jove, she's a beauty,' he said, and then pulling himself together, 'But I can't accept it, little one, it's bad enough not being able to give you things.' 'You are making me a present by taking it,' she said. There was a look almost of love in his eyes. He kissed her rather noisily. 'Sorry,' he said to me, 'I've always got what I wanted in life, and do you know how it's done? First, you must want a thing, and then you must take it. Your lips are my property now, little girl, and I shall prove it to you just as often as I want to.' She looked at him with adoring eyes—'But you're so strong, Howard, you won't take advantage of your strength, will you?' I saw the cunning look in his eyes as he responded to her hopes—'You are going to belong to me,' he said roughly, 'and I shan't let you forget it.'

"'I am afraid you think that Howard is rather brutal,' she said to me one day. 'You see, he has never really been in love before—I sometimes think it is more overpowering when it comes to people late. Of course, I don't mean that he hasn't had lots of affairs with women,' she added with pride. (He had evidently changed his route a little) but he took them quite coolly in his stride. 'This is the first time, he told me that he has ever felt not quite master of himself. And, of course, he is rather primitive—I always feel he is so cramped by towns and houses, and even,' she blushed a little, by clothes.'

"Eunice wanted to be married at midnight, but she gave way to Howard, who pointed out that the vicar would be so much surprised, and so would Mrs. Jenkins, and what would his married sister and her husband, and his married brother and his wife, think? After all, being an authoress and all that, one had to be, if anything, more careful than other people.

"Eunice was thinking a great deal about houses—she liked the thought of Tudor with a courtyard, and, yet, how lovely the gold, gray stone of Somerset and Dorset was! After our visit to Paris nothing surprised me.

"ULTIMATELY, she found an exquisite Queen Anne Manor house, with quite perfect proportions and a mellow, serene dignity, which reminded you of a late summer afternoon. She had it furnished by a decorator. 'Later,' she said, 'we will pick things up, things that will make it more personal, but I didn't like to trust myself with the foundations, I am so inexperienced.'

"The house was in such perfect taste that it was undeniably a little depressing. Even the most daring touches ('We quite understand that Miss Evans wishes for something individual') attained the impersonal quality that vicarous risks always manage to assume. 'It will be much friendlier,' I said, 'when things get littered about in it, embroidery silks and sealing wax and books.' 'And Howard's pipes,' Eunice added in a low, ecstatic voice.

"Eunice really didn't like women much, and the men she had known had failed in any way to correspond with man as she imagined him to be. The archdeacon, of course, had been an uncle, the vicar a clergyman, and the doctor a widower, but even had they not suffered from these disabilities, it was useless to deny that they would still not have been very like Jasper in 'Wax Flowers' or Cyprian in 'Clare's Calvary.' Howard, of course, was quite different. Howard was a man—'a man's man, dear,' she would explain with pride. 'Don't imagine I am going to spend my time kicking my heels in your drawing room," he said to me—'besides, I've got to work—you don't expect me to live on my wife's income, do you?'"

"But I couldn't tell Eunice any of the things that I expected. How could I? Her adventure was out of my hands. I could only soil it with advice and doubts and precautions, and possibly, embitter the final crash with silent 'I told you so's,' so I decided to take the other line, to pander to her every whim. Even an unhappy marriage is entitled to its orange blossom, its white satin, and its high forlorn hopes. Mrs. Jenkins thought Eunice should be married in a hat, but then, it is possible that Mrs. Jenkins thought that Eunice was going to be happy.

"A registry office, an old coat and skirt—what other equipment do you need when you start out flooded with ecstasy, trying, in vain, to plant a doubt — for luck — into your secret certainties?

"But I who knew that Eunice's romance could only last just as long as she was able not to realize Howard, I arranged that the church should be drenched in flowers and swollen with music, that a double choir should be triumphantly choral and a single soloist triumphantly pathetic (yes, she did sing, 'O, for the Wings, for the Wings of a Dove.') I over-rode Mrs. Jenkins and chose the stiff white satin, the sliver brocade train, the vast bouquet of lilies of the valley. I pinned on the tulle veil which covered the whole figure in a mist of folds. I gave her a blue garter and clasped the pearls around her neck. After all, when she walked down the aisle on the arm of the arch deacon, she looked 'a bride'—what bride can want to do more?—and with her veil thrown back and Mendelssohn convincing one that the whole thing was quite legal, she looked so radiant that I think even Howard himself must have felt either a little glad or a little guilty."

"And was the wedding reception in the Godalming house?"

"Yes—that was the last time they were there. 'I have been very happy here,' Eunice said while she was changing into her going-away dress, 'but now it seems as if it had been a sort of preparation for happiness, a kind of dedication.' She looked out of the window. 'The pergola really is very pretty,' she said, 'and I have always thought the maiden hair looked rather nice among the rocks.' With her dream opening, with reality gleaming ahead of her, she could afford to enter her house, the house that she had practically never inhabited. 'You never did very much like the begonias, did you Margaret, dear? I confess I was proud of them, but I expect you were right, and, of course, the house would never have done for Howard.'

"She lingered a little sadly, I thought, in the bedroom where she had dreamt so many dreams. Then, we heard Howard calling, 'where's my wife?' and Eunice hurried downstairs, but, just as she was getting into her motor, she ran back—'Margaret,' she said, 'the tiger skin — do you think that the tiger skin would look right in the manor house?' 'Of course,' I reassured her. 'I am so glad,' she murmured, 'it will feel so nice seeing it again.'"

"And that was the beginning of the end?"

"Well, in a way. They went to the Italian lakes and motored about —that was all right, I think. Eunice adored Howard, and Howard adored nothing. It wasn't until they came back that things began to go wrong. You have gathered, at least I hope I have made it clear, that Eunice was an absolutist, a romantic and idealist —call it what you will—she had never compromised. She didn't know how to. When they got back to Rosecomb that was the name of the manor house) Howard didn't like it. He didn't say so in so many words, but he allowed her to gather that he didn't think the house very cozy.

"And had she considered the fact that there were no really first-class golf links in the neighborhood?

"No, she had not considered it.

"It had seemed such a lovely house (the agent had said that it was a gem of the period known to every lover of architecture) and near enough to London for him to go up to work.

"You must understand that it wasn't that Eunice wanted Howard to work, she couldn't at that time, bear him out of her sight, only she knew the Howard that she loved wouldn't be able to bear a life of idleness, and, therefore, the Howard she loved must want to work.

The Whole Story

A Blue Ribbon Short Story

"Howard said he must look about for something congenial to do. Naturally, he wasn't the man to loaf about, kept in luxury by his wife's money. Eunice said she knew exactly how he felt about her money, but she proposed to make a settlement on him which would make him entirely independent of her—which she did."

"That really was the end, I suppose?"

"No, it wasn't as simple as all that. Howard, of course, was a bounder and a kind of cad, but he was much too lazy to be vicious. The most he ever wanted to do was, as he put it himself, 'occasionally to make a night of it.' Sometimes he would get a little drunk, but only a little, just enough to make his voice a little thick and his eyes a little blurred. He liked his hearth and his home, his cigar and his doze in front of the fire. He wished no one any harm. When he wanted a thing, he was capable of an astonishing amount of cunning—when he had got it, he relapsed into quiescence. If anything was short of his expectations he was aggrieved, but if anything was in excess of them he was still more so.

" 'The Godalming house was quite good enough for me,' he kept grumbling and as what was good enough for him was clearly, absolutely good, everything else was an irrelevance and an irritant. It was on these grounds that he so particularly disliked Eunice's beautiful red lacquer cabinet. It attracted his attention, and if there was one thing that Howard disliked more than another, it was having his attention attracted. 'Anything for a quiet life,' he would say, and the anything meant nothing. Nothing beautiful, nothing exceptional, nothing that could call for a moment or disturb the serene and desirable course of the absolutely ordinary."

"And Eunice?"

"I was warding it off. Later, when everything had come to an end she confided to me what had been her first flash of realization. I knew I was being wicked, but I couldn't help it. I wanted to feel that absolute surrender, which only comes when one has been physically mastered. I was so proud and so happy then to belong to Howard, and I was passionately in love with him. Only, I was haunted by the thought that I had given myself so willingly, so almost greedily — a man must surely want to have some resistance to overcome. So, one night, when he came into my room, I said 'Not tonight, Howard, please not tonight, I am so tired.' He didn't even come up to my bed. He just said, O, all right,' and walked away into his dressing room. His voice sounded quite indifferent, but I thought he must be hurt, that he was steeling himself. So I crept into his room—he was snoring quite peacefully. I woke him up, 'Howard,' I said, 'I haven't wounded you, have I?' 'I don't know what you're talking about,' he said, 'for God's sake let me go to sleep,' and he turned over and was asleep in a minute. 'You see,' she went on pathetically, 'if he had believed that I was tired or not feeling well, he ought to have been concerned, but he just seemed indifferent and a little relieved at being spared all the bother of being loving.' "

"Poor Eunice—her brute was not only a brute, he was hardly a man—just a lazy, self-indulgent creature with barely enough personality to be called an egoist, with just enough sense of self-preservation to be cunning when it was necessary, and not enough self-rsepect to honor his pledges.

"And yet, how hard Eunice fought for her illusions. I have told you the end so quickly. It took ever such a long time, really. For months she put her imagination between them, struggling in vain to hide from herself the daily spectacle of Howard as he really was. For months her passion—and she was in love with him—enabled her to overlook him, to recreate him in the image of her love. But she was worn out, worn out by his content, his unconsciousness that there was anything the matter."

"And did you ever speak to him?"

"Yes, I tried to make him see it. I said, 'Surely you remember all the things you pretended to be when you were engaged?' 'But,' he argued, 'one can't go on pretending forever. Then they were false pretences?' 'So was the house at Godalming.' (Howard's cunning was reasserting itself.) 'Well,' he said, If I did all the manly business to impress her, didn't she buy this confounded house to impress me?' 'No,' I said, 'a thousand times no.' Then, what did she buy it for?' 'For herself and you—for your happiness.' She was perfectly happy at Godalming.' 'Till you came along and romance.' 'Well, she's got a husband—what more does a woman want?

"You see, it was hopeless—Howard had never seen one of Eunice's dreams. He had realized in a sort of coarse way that she longed to be swept off her feet, that she wanted to be mastered. But, that was all—he knew nothing of the life she had led before she met him, of the marble palaces, and the Simla garden parties. She had just been a maiden lady living at Godalming, surrounded by knick-knacks—a nice safe investment with a monkey puzzle and an arbor."

"Perhaps we are unreasonable to blame him — perhaps, after all, he showed more of his character than she did—poor Eunice, the gay deceiver."

"Eunice, the creator, Eunice, the dreamer. She is not even a best seller any more—a worm of life has got into her books, a horrible, dry rot of reality.

"She has a villa on the Riviera now, you know. But the other day she wrote to me, 'The Cote d'Azur is charming in its way—but it's not all one thinks."

Sandhills

and

Donald G. Herring

Jane Borden had married him, suddenly and unexpectedly—on an impulse. And then she had ridden over to tell the other man that their friendship must end. With dreams of happiness, she rode to her husband's cabin—her own new home—and found him drunk, surly, vicious—more of a beast than a man.

A dramatic situation in a powerful story of the forest and sandhills of the south!

And just one of the intensely dramatic situations that run throughout sandhills, a new Blue Ribbon serial that begins in this magazine next Sunday.

stitution enabled her to resist the fevers that began the third day after she was brought aboard the Prins. The attending physicians refused to hold out any hope for a long time, but finally their tone became more cheerful and eventually they pronounced her recovery certain.

When her convalescence advanced more rapidly, Peter Gross and Koyala had long talks. He found her hard to understand. Some days she was gay, with a hot tempestuous gayety that caused him to remonstrate with her and warn her against too great excitement in her present condition. At other times she was sad and depressed.

She talked very little of Bulungan and Borneo. On the contrary, she pressed him for a daily account of his doings, whom he had met, what they had said, how he spent the hours he was away from her. Occasionally, too, she asked him for news of Grace Coston and Vincent Brady.

One day he entered her room with face aglow. "They are here," he announced—"Miss Coston and Mr. Brady. They wish to see you. They leave tomorrow for America."

Koyala seemed panic-stricken for a moment. Then she pulled herself together and requested that they be admitted.

Vincent entered impulsively, his boyish features aglow with gratitude. He clasped the limp hand Koyala gave him and inquired solicitously whether she was regaining her strength. Koyala replied with subdued cordiality to his protestations of gratitude.

While the dialog was going on, Grace remained in the background. Finally her eyes met Koyala's. The cheeks of both women flushed. Grace expressed herself reservedly. But the eyes of the two women exchanged more messages than their lips.

"Are you going back to America soon?" Koyala inquired at length.

"We leave tomorrow," Grace replied.

Koyala's glance stole toward Peter Gross. He was looking at Grace with a peculiar, wistful expression. She diverted the conversation to less personal channels.

When Vincent and his promised bride left she sank back on the pillows wearily.

"I am very tired today, Mynheer Gross," she said. "I wish I were back in Bulungan."

"We will both go there soon. I hope," he replied.

She glanced at him searchingly. "Are you not planning to go to America first?"

"I've rather given up that idea," he replied, slowly. He looked up with a smile. "I couldn't very well do it because you asked me not to. Could I?"

Koyala did not reply. Her face was turned away from him and buried in the pillows. After a long silence she said:

"You may leave me now for a while, mynheer. I think I shall sleep."

Three days later a hurried summons called Peter to the hospital. A badly worried superintendent met him.

"Our patient is gone," he announced. "We've searched high and low and cannot find the slightest trace of her. She was in the garden with the other convalescents this morning, and that is the last that has been seen of her. Under her pillow we found this note addressed to you."

Peter tore open the envelope with trembling hand. This was the message he read:

"Goodby, Mynheer Gross. I am returning to my people. It is best that we do not see each other again. You are absolved from your promise to me. I wish you every happiness in your return to your own land. I will never forget what I owe to you."

There was no signature. But pinned to the bottom of the sheet was a tiny feather, an argus pheasant feather.

Peter's eyes dimmed. Meeting the superintendent's glance he asked gravely:

"The packet left at noon for Banjer, did it not?"

"Yes, mynheer."

"Then there is no further need of looking for her," he said, and hastened to the governor general's quarters. Sachsen met him as he entered the building. Eyes blinded with tears, Peter showed him the note.

"It is sad, but for the best Vrind Pieter," the old man declared sympathetically. "She is wise beyond her years—wiser than thou art, my son. Go to America as she says. I will explain to his excellency."

Peter gazed at the distant stretches of ocean, visible through a lofty arched window. The sea rolled invitingly northward.

"I have wasted days long enough, Vrind Sachsen," he replied softly. "Ah Sing is still at large, there is work for me to do in Bulungan. Tomorrow I go home."

THE END.

No. 2—HONESTY IS THE BEST POLICY

By JANE CORBY

A young squirrel once to his mother said,
"I'm tired of being good!
I'm going to be a bandit bold
And terrorize the wood, wood, wood!
And terrorize the wood!"

So off he went to the deep, deep wood,
And prowled from tree to tree.
"I'll find some other squirrel's nest
And rob it!" muttered he, he, he,
"And rob it!" muttered he.

He found a good gray squirrel's nest,
And stole the nuts away;
The nuts the good gray squirrel had stored
By working every day, day, day,
By working every day.

Soon after that he met a mouse
And hid behind a tree;
And when the meadow mouse came by Right boldly out popped he, he, he,
Right boldly out popped he.

'Paws up!" he shouted at the mouse,
"And give me what you've got!"
The meadow mouse gave up his grain,
For fear he would be shot, shot, shot,
For fear he would be shot.

One day the bandit found a nest,
A nest by robins made.
The nest was full of pretty eggs,
And so he made a raid, raid, raid,
And so he made a raid.

And day by day this bandit bold
Was not the least bit good.
He acted just as he had said,
And terrorized the wood, wood, wood
And terrorized the wood!

At last Policeman Owl came by.
'You've broken our good laws!"
And then he seized the bandit bold
With his big curving claws, claws, claws!
With his big curving claws.

The bandit jumped and got away,
And ran home much afraid.
"Oh, Mother, I've come to tell
The big mistake I made, made, made!
The big mistake I made.

"And never, never, will I go
To rob another nest.
For honesty's the policy
That I have found is best, best, best!
That I have found is best!"

A LITTLE VISIT TO THE WORLD'S STRANGEST RANCH

How would you like to run a lion ranch? This sounds like a fairy tale, but such a ranch really exists—near Los Angeles.

As you approach the ranch you hear a muffled roar, which you might imagine to be a rumble of distant thunder, or a threatening earthquake about to break forth, but it is only "Numa," the big lion, talking to his large family.

Mr. and Mrs. Gay, the proprietors of this unique ranch—or farm, are deeply, very actively interested in the raising of this strange "stock," and are wonderfully successful. Mr. Gay, himself "raised" among the hills of France, has spent most of his life caring for, and training wild animals, therefore is quite able to understand their peculiar traits and habits.

Have Fifty Lions.

The present stock, which numbers fifty, consists of six full-grown lions, the rest being of various ages and sizes, down to the three new babies, but a few days old. Unlike kittens, their eyes are open at birth, but they can not see well until about ten days old. They are weaned when six weeks old, and are then fed from the bottle on goat's milk, but very soon begin to eat flesh. Their meals then consist of flesh, sometimes eggs—of which they are especially fond—and they drink milk and water.

These lions are usually groomed every day, and the cubs wear as silky a coat as a carefully combed and brushed puppy. A lion sheds his coat and mane as does a dog.

Cubs Are Playful.

The cubs are teachable, though perhaps not so intelligent as the dog. They are playful as kittens; mischievous as puppies, indeed, they appear somewhat like as they are dragged about by their caretaker.

These small animals are usually quiet at night, unless the weather is unpleasant, when they make known their discomfort by uneasiness. If they take cold, as sometimes happens, they are taken into the ranch-house and cared for by Mrs. Gay's own hands.

Soon Reaches Maturity.

Full maturity is reached at eight years, and at the longest, the lion lives but thirty to thirty-five years.

The mild, sunny climate of California suits the lion's warmth-loving nature, and in his clean, comfortable compartment—a cage set several feet above ground—his huge body stretched out, massive chin resting on motionless paws, he loves to lie and watch with half-closed eyes the antics of his offspring. He appears profoundly content, but never quite so domesticated as his wife.

Lion Seldom Attacks.

We are apt to think of the lion as a fierce, cruel, hungry creature, always wanting to lunch on people, but this is not generally true. He seldom attacks man unless very hungry, or in defense of himself or family. In fact, he is capable of great love and devotion.

A lion was once attracting crowds, because of this trait, faithfulness. Some weeks before his mate had died, and the poor fellow was so cast down with grief, so inconsolable, that he refused to eat or drink. Reduced to skin and bones, he lay with closed eyes, occasionally emitting a rumbling groan. With great effort he would now and then stagger a few feet, only to sink down with a terrible heart-rending groan.

His care-taker was in despair, and as soon as possible a new mate was found for him. For a time he took no notice of her, but at length a little interest dawned in his eyes. He grew gradually better; life seemed a little less unbearable, and at last her presence was accepted.

Names Lions.

Mr. Gay has a name for every lion, from Numa, the oldest, down to Baby Lady, the youngest cub, excepting the three late arrivals. There are also Princess, Nigger, Peter, Og Wog, Slats, and many others.

One might wonder why such care and pains are taken to raise and tame these wild-natured animals, but the film companies have created a great demand for their pictures, and the camera-man is an interested visitor at the ranch. They are also rented out to "shows," though occasionally some animals are sold outright to circuses. The last are always parted from with real regret.

Romps With Lions.

Who among ordinary people would "have the nerve" to romp with the huge Pluto, as the picture shows Mr. Gay to be doing? This lion stands eight feet and weighs four hundred pounds! Mrs. Gay also appears as smilingly calm in the midst of her strange companions, as a farm-mother among her hens and turkeys.

Is it possible that a lion has a sense of humor? On one occasion you would almost have believed he has. A photographer at the ranch was preparing to take the picture of Mr. Gay posing before the camera, but when his head emerged from under the "black cloth," the terrified artist found a lion had taken the man's place, and sat calmly awaiting the proceedings. The photographer began dancing a frantic jig behind his apparatus, while the lion actually seemed to grin.

"Oh, Alice, Alice, now see what you've done," wailed Edna. "Father will be so angry. I would just like to spank you."

Little Alice looked up at her with a guilty, roguish expression on her baby face. "Alice paint," she declared. "Alice paint pretty."

"Yes, I see 'Alice paint'," said Edna with a rueful smile. Her father was an artist and she was fond of visiting his down town studio. She was very quiet and never touched anything or asked any questions, so she was always welcome. Edna was always a little in awe of her temperamental father. She shuddered now to think what he would say. He would be just furious.

It was all her fault, too. She had brought Baby Alice to the studio with her, knowing well Alice's mischievous ways. Her father was not in, so they waited. Edna got to looking at some pictures in his file, and forgot all about Baby Alice, whose quietness should have warned her. When she turned to look, Alice had been busily squeezing out tubes of paints all over a canvas he had just set up, a nice fresh canvas. It was simply ruined—covered with daubs of every color.

"Oh, Alice," Edna wailed again. The door opened, and Edna trembled. Instead of her father, in came a large lady, very flashily dressed. "Father's not in," Edna answered her question, "but he ought to be here any minute."

The lady walked over to the easel, where the ruined canvas stood. "Oh, how grand," she exclaimed. "I didn't know your father had taken up this newfangled kind of painting. I'm just crazy about it. I like the way he uses his colors—bold, dashing!"

Edna looked at her in astonishment. Then she was aware of her father in the doorway. He was trying very hard to keep from laughing. He stepped forward. "How do you do, Mrs. Gillen. I'm glad yu like my new painting, though it is a little different. No, it's not for sale. I'm sorry." He talked with her for a little while longer and finally got rid of her.

Then he turned to Edna, still chuckling. "I ought to scold you bad kiddies, but—" he started chuckling again. "I guess this is your lucky day. Come on out and I'll buy you some ice cream."

Building a Model Airplane

HOW TO MAKE THE TAIL

BY TERENCE VINCENT.
Director, Miniature Aircraft Fliers.

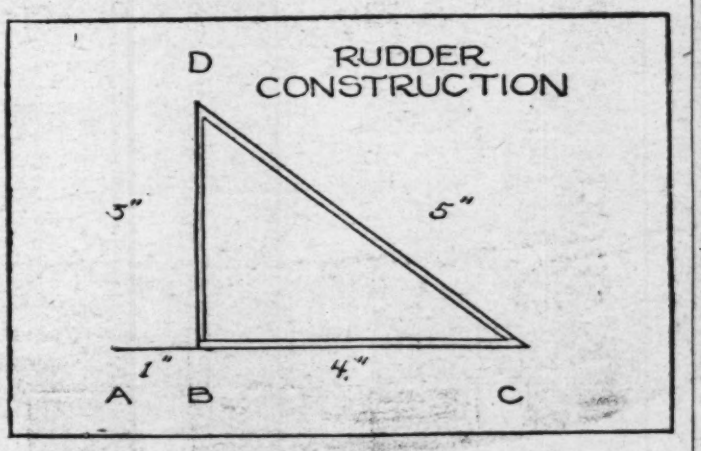

(This is the second of a series of six lessons which tell in detail how to make a model airplane. If you missed the first one, write to this paper for a copy. You can't miss one of these lessons if you want to make the model speed plane.)

A rudder (or fin) plus the elevator makes the tail of an airplane.

The puller type of plane has the propeller in front and the tail behind where a tail is located on birds, planes and other flying things. The airplane rudder gives the craft right to left direction, like the rudder of a water-going boat. With Miniature Fliers, the rudder is set in one position for a flight and cannot be changed during the flight.

Maintains Balance.

The elevator seems to cooperate with the airplane wing in maintaining side-to-side balance and front to back balance. If the elevator is brought closer to the wing, or the wing is brought back toward the elevator, the miniature airplane may do surprising stunts when released under full power. The first thing for beginners to learn is to put the wing in the center of the motor base according to the weight front to back and side to side, then try to fly it straight. If the plane dives, put the wing forward until it travels on an even keel.

On the Lahann No 1 miniature airplane, the elevator is made of two 4½ inch bamboo strips a little less than 1-8 inch in cross section, and 4 strips 2 inches long. They are laid in an oblong shape with the glossy side down, and glued in the same manner in which the wing points were glued. The tissue paper is applied, dried and cut off in the same manner described for the wing.

Use Bamboo Strips.

A rudder is about half the area of the elevator.

In this case three bamboo strips, with the same cross-section used in the elevator strips, are needed. One is three inches long for the vertical strip; the other two each are five inches long, one is the hypotenuse (or long side) of the triangle. The other is the horizontal side.

In geometry it is taught that a right-triangle is made when the three sides are in the same ratio of three, four and five. So it is with the rudder on Lahann No 1 miniature airplane; the vertical side is three inches tall with the glossy side away from the interior of the triangle, the five-inch hypotenuse is the long side, and the four-inch side is the horizontal piece with the glossy side down, leaving one inch protuding past the vertical stick.

Lay the stick in the position shown in the drawing and glue the joints in the manner described for the wing and for the elevator. Apply tissue paper covering in the same manner previously described.

(Article 3 will explain the motor base construction.)

Stories—Jokes—Games—Things to Make

IN SNOPPYQUOP LAND WHERE NOTHING SEEMS QUEER

In Ye Olden Days, out in the west, where Snoppyquops are Snoppyquops, there lived a gent named Paul Revere who had acquired considerable reputation on account of a ride he took some years before to warn the people that the Red Coats were coming. (If they had been greenbacks he wouldn't have told them.) This happened in '75—(no, that wasn't Paul's golf score) in the middle of the night. That's why the brave Snoppy has an electric light on his dome. Anyway, another man, who had a prehistoric wheelbarrow, challenged Paul Revere to a race. "You ride your what-not, and I'll ride my wheelbarrow, and we'll see who can first go a mile and eight furlongs."

"No, I'd rather race two miles," said Paul.

"All right," said the other.

So he adjusted his parasol and they took their positions before the post office. And what do you think happened? Even though the wheelbarrow got two bunions and a flat tire, it won, because when Paul learned that a mile and eight furlongs was the same as two miles anyway, he got so mad that he boiled over, which got the road all muddy. For every step ahead he'd slip back two, and it was only by turning around and going backwards that he was able to finish at all.

SOME EXPERIMENTS WITH WATER

(This is the second of a series of science stories which tell all sorts of queer and interesting facts about the everyday world.)

Water is an everyday occurrence, and, as everyone knows, there is considerable of it on this earth. And yet how much do you all know about it? What is it, and of what is it made?

Water exists in various forms, depending on its temperature. At ordinary temperatures it is a colorless, tasteless liquid. When it is cooled sufficiently becomes a solid and is known as ice or snow, and when it is heated just above the boiling point it becomes an invisible gas known as steam. When this steam is suddenly cooled, it is turned into small liquid particles floating in the air and we call it vapor.

Is Made of Gases.

But it is not "just water." It is actually made up of two invisible, tasteless gases known as hydrogen and oxygen. When these two gases are mixed—two parts of hydrogen and one part of oxygen—and this mixture is then united by an explosion, somewhat as an explosion is produced in the cylinders of an automobile engine, water results. And since two parts of hydrogen were united in the process to one part of oxygen, the chemist writes water as H_2O.

We can also separate water into these two gases, and by means of the apparatus shown in Figure 1. The U-Shaped glass tube is filled with water to which a few drops of sulphuric acid have been added. The acid is added merely so that an electric current may pass from the wire marked "Positive-Anode" to the metal plate marked "P," through the liquid to the right-hand plate and out at the wire marked "Negative-Cathode."

Current Is Passed.

When current from an ordinary electric light socket is passed through the liquid, small bubbles of gas will be seen to form at both plates, pass up through the water and out. The bubbles forming at the left-hand plate are composed of oxygen; those forming at the right-hand are hydrogen.

Figure 2 shows a piece of apparatus that enables us to collect the gases so formed. As the current passes into the glass tube at the positive anode, through the water and out again by way of the negative cathode, bubbles of gas form in each arm of the apparatus. But those forming in tube D will collect twice as fast as those forming in the tube marked E. The former will contain hydrogen; the latter oxygen. And as these gases form, they force the surplus water up into the reservoir marked C.

(Next week we'll learn about the strange things called mirages.)

Obliging.

He (standing in front of the mirror): "Whatcha lookin' at?"

Other: "Nuthin."

He: "Oh, all right. I'll move over so you can see better."

Couldn't Hurry.

Passenger: "What makes this train so slow?"

Irate Conductor: "If you don't like it, get off and walk."

Passenger: "I would, only I'm not expected until train time."

"That's nothing but a big bluff," was what he said when a picture of the Rock of Gibraltar was flashed on the screen.

KNUTE ROCKNE GIVES BOYS POINTS ON HOW THEY CAN BEST PLAY END

Knute Rockne, coach of the star Notre Dame football team, answers today a question about football, especially for the readers of this page.

Just Exactly What Are The Duties of The End, and What Sort of Build Should He Have?

Offensively an end must know how to box a tackle, must be able to get into the open and "snag" passes and must have sufficient speed and change of pace to cover punts well.

Defensively he must be able to get back into the backfield fast and make a play develop as soon as possible without committing himself until the play does develop. He must not let the runner get around him nor must he leave such a large gap between himself and the defensive tackle that it becomes almost impossible for the tackle to stop an off-tackle slant.

Must Follow Behind.

If the play starts the other way he must follow around behind and never run behind his own line of scrimmage. He must be able to weigh values on formations and know when to drop back and play defensively against passes. Also he must sometimes drop back against punt formation and bother the offensive end who is trying to cover the punt. He should keep in communication with his own defensive half and tackle so they will know what he intends to do and can govern themselves accordingly. Offensively or defensively he must keep off the ground.

The ideal build of an end is one tall enough to catch passes well, but not so tall as to interfere with his ability to box his tackle. He must be nifty on his feet and be able to use his hands well. He must have at least fair speed and he must be a thinker. I do not think that size makes much difference.

(Next week Gilmour Dobie, coach at Cornell university, will answer another football question.)

LIGHTNING DOES STRIKE TWICE

the same place, in spite of the popular saying which declares it doesn't. In some of the National Forests trees have been found that bear the scars of as many as seven or eight separate lightning strokes.

Lightning is hard on our forests, as sometimes the trees struck by lightning catch on fire, the fire spreads, and the result is a great loss of valuable lumber.

No Tree Is Safe.

There is no tree that is especially subject to lightning, nor is there any kind of tree that is immune from it. It used to be a popular belief that the safest tree to take refuge under during a storm was the beech. Scientists, however, have proved that the beech really doesn't escape lightning any more than any other tree.

There are certain zones in the forests which seem to be especially subject to the ravages of lightning. The special belt of trouble in North America is in Arizona and New Mexico. In Arizona, on the cinder flat east of San Francisco mountain, half of the trees have been killed or injured at some time by this enemy of the forests.

Freddy Frog was sitting under a large, spreading leaf, trying to keep cool, one summer day, when he heard a humming noise above his head. "Must be a big bee!" thought Freddy, looking out from under his leaf. "Oh, hello," he cried, "so it's you, Happy Humming-Bird! I thought it was a bee." The humming-bird continued to make loud music with his wings. "I'm surprised at you, Freddy," he said. "Not to know the sound of my wings from the buzzing of a bee!" "Well, it's so hot," Freddy defended himself. "I don't like to think very hard when it's hot. Tell me a story, Happy."

"'Go,' said he, 'and find out which is the right trail. Then he sat down to wait, while the bird flew away. All day long the little boy waited and all night, and just as the moon was putting the little stars to bed for the day, back came the humming-bird. So the boy arose and followed him as he led the way, and he knew he was on the right trail. In another day and a night he reached the home of White Deer and the chief promised to come to his father's feast. So together they returned to the little boy's father, White Deer, the little boy and the humming-bird.

"One day, when the green corn moon was in the sky, the wise chief called the little boy to him. 'Son,' said he, 'the green corn moon is in the sky, and the corn is ripe in our fields. We have plenty of food to last us through the winter, and many sweet fruits to please us now. I am going to give a great feast and thank the Great Spirit for giving us so splendid a harvest. I am going to invite my friend, White Deer, who is chief of a far-away land. Do you think you could go to him with a message?' The little boy looked at the humming-bird who hovered near. 'I can go,' he declared.

"'The sun will set twice, and twice it will rise, before you reach the far-away land,' went on the chief. 'But the trail is plain, and you will not lack for friends. The little folk of the wood will come out and play with you, and the big folk will guard you. At night the moon and the stars will look down upon you, and the will-o'-the wisps will light your way.' The little boy nodded. 'Yes, and my bird with the wing song will go with me.' The chief smiled. 'Take him with you if you like,' he said. 'He will make your journey pleasant.'

"'Father,' said the little boy when he reached home, 'the humming-bird showed me the way. I would like to reward him in some way. You see, he is very plain, while other birds wear pretty suits. Do you think you could paint his coat for him?' The chief, who loved his little son, was grateful to the humming-bird for helping him find the way. 'I'll see what I can do,' he said. So he gathered flowers and grasses, and pressed the colors from them—yellow, orange, red and green—and he painted the humming-bird's coat. So ever since, the humming-bird has worn a bright coat of many colors, Freddy," concluded the humming-bird. But Freddy was fast asleep under the leaf.

"So the little boy set off next morning. The humming-bird flew just ahead of him, making music with his wings. Whenever the little boy was hungry he stopped to eat berries, and the squirrels, chipmunks and rabbits came out and played with him. He slept that night with the starry sky to cover him, and the will-o'-the wisps played near him to give him light. In the morning he hurried on his way and soon came to the edge of the wood. And there two trails were plainly marked. 'Now, which is the right one?' thought the little boy. After a while he turned to the humming-bird.

this new apartment house, at 2052 Peachtree road, comes honestly by its name of "Castle Pines."

SPACIOUS, AIRY, COMFORTABLE
are the features of new Atlanta apartment houses. The Piedmont Court apartments at 835 Piedmont avenue carry out this three-fold idea.

DEEP, BEAUTIFULLY TERRACED GROUNDS

Your Security Is The Earth

and Its Improvements

AT this time when so much is being said about foreign investments, clients will do well to pay some attention to the opportunities right at home. It is an old saying that the field furthest away always looks greenest, and it is a fact that the majority of people who would not risk investing in a local business will readily invest their money in some mine or oil well property a thousand miles away.

Compared with the interest rates which can be obtained on other securities, good real estate mortgages are very attractive. While high-grade corporation bonds are now selling to yield not over 5% to 6%, safe first mortgages on real estate bring from 6% to 8%. Experience shows that this is one of the safest forms of investment obtainable.

In the thirty-three years during which we have placed money for clients in mortgages on Atlanta real estate we have never lost a dollar. That speaks well for the security and for the handling of each individual transaction. We have financed the construction of residence property, small investment parcels, commercial buildings and the high-grade apartment houses of fireproof construction. At the present time we have over $12,000,000 in safe mortgages on our books represented in more than 3,000 loans for clients in all parts of the United States.

SMALL SAVINGS INVESTMENTS

These loans have ranged from $500 to $250,000. Through our City Savings Bank we have represented young working folks investing their first savings in real estate mortgages as well as the great insurance companies. The City Savings Bank has a $100,000 Capital and is a State Bank, and as such is examined quarterly by the Georgia State Banking Department. We invite savings accounts of all sizes, large and small, on which we pay 4% interest. When your account reaches the sum of $500 we will invest it for you in safe first mortgages on which you will receive from 6% to 8% returns. In this way you receive all the safeguards that our training and experience can provide even on your small investment.

For your idle funds you will find no investment safer or more profitable than a first mortgage on Atlanta real estate. Now is the time to begin to accumulate such mortgages!

OUR loan business gradually brought us into contact with so many other phases of the real estate business that the enlargement of our organization was inevitable. Consequently we have added the following other lines: Renting and Insurance.

So many of our clients for whom we placed loans or who borrowed money through our agency asked that we handle their property for them that the renting department was almost an automatic development. We not only handle commercial property and the high-grade apartment houses, but the smallest parcels as well. Those having high-class property may place it all in our hands without the annoyance of having several agencies handle it.

APARTMENTS FOR RENT

We have a few beautiful apartments located in the apartment houses pictured above. These range in size from one room with bath to five rooms and two baths. These apartments are in Atlanta's most fashionable residential section. Prices on these are most reasonable. The Granada and Castle Pines are just being completed and will be ready for occupancy October 1st. We also have apartments and houses in every section of the city. Apartments and houses to meet every need—to please the most fastidious.

INSURANCE

Insurance was another department which was made inevitable by the growth of our business. We represent the best old line companies and have a staff in our office capable of handling all the local details of this business. Everything is concentrated — all the departments of real estate are concentrated in our office quarters, and a client dealing in one thing, like a loan, may place his rent account and insurance without leaving the place.

Those who remember the old Weyman & Connors quarters in the old Equitable (now the Trust Company of Georgia) Building and later in the Grant Building will see now a much larger office space and organization in our Grant Building offices on the Sixth Floor. However, our old system is the same. Our growth has not caused us to neglect the painstaking care we give to every account.

Ordinary Soaps Cannot Do This For Your Skin!

Here is the test that has converted countless numbers of women to Crystal Bath Alcohol Massage.

NOTICE THE DIRT AND GREASE THAT COMES OFF ON THE RAG! When you know the effect of these impurities left in the skin by ordinary soap and water you will understand the reason so many women have poor complexions. You will also know why hundreds of women each day are turning to Crystal Bath.

Try a Crystal Bath Alcohol Massage and feel the refreshing effect. Have the satisfaction of knowing that your skin is clean and free from impurities that cause pimples, blackheads and blemishes. This NEW SUNSET SERVICE makes play of home-dyeing

How you can learn this ancient art in a few minutes with a clean, modern dye

YOU have probably read of SUNSET in the magazines—it is sold everywhere. It is the new-fashioned fast dye that comes in a neat cake and never stains your hands or pans.

Now, with the cooperation of the leading merchants, we offer you a service that makes SUNSET dyeing more interesting and useful than ever.

Go to your favorite drug or department store and ask for the SUNSET folder of "Season's Colors"—it is free. In this folder you will find, besides the list of 22 standard SUNSET colors, simple recipes for obtaining 58 charming and unusual shades. No special skill is required to mix these colors, just as no special skill is required to use SUNSET in any way.

You will be amazed at the ease with which you can get perfectly marvelous new effects in draperies, pillow covers, bed spreads, blouses, stockings and scarves.

It makes no difference what material you want to dye—SUNSET dyes anything—silk, wool, cotton, linen, mixed goods. And instead of the long, tedious job which you would have with the old-fashioned kind of dyes, you are through with SUNSET dyeing in thirty minutes—and your results are fine as the work of the best professional dyers.

IF your dealer happens to be out of the SUNSET folder of Season's Colors, we will gladly send you one without charge. If you have any special questions about dyeing, write to our Home Service Department—just address Dept. 112, North American Dye Corporation, Mt. Vernon, N. Y.

Articles dyed with SUNSET have the lustre and finish of new goods.
